THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1910.

The sorority girls are to be complimented for their action in cutting out the unnecessary expenses incident to the formal parties annually given by each of the nine organizations. While at first thought their action seems less radical than that of the men in abolishing half of their formals, a little thought will show that the results of the two methods will be quite alike. The girls can, if they will, cut the expense of the formals practically in half, which will equal the saving made by the men.

THE SOPHOMORE CONSTITUTION.

The present sophomore class believes in doing things a bit differently from others. His tendency has been manifest at several times during the past semester, but at no time more beneficially than in the provisions of the constitution adopted Tuesday.

The new constitution provides definitely for the class voting franchise. It expressly prohibits the participation in sophomore affairs of senior academics carrying freshman law work and it fixes the status of other law students. By these provisions it makes impossible the wrangles similar to those which have disturbed this and other classes.

The best feature of the whole document, however, is the change made in the method of selecting an Ivy Day orator. Heretofore this official has been appointed by a committee, itself appointed by the president, or else he has been named directly by the executive. This system tended to lower one of the principal honors of the university to the level of a political job. Almost invariably the political activity of the various aspirants was an important figure in determining his selection.

The new system to a considerable extent kills this influence. The com-of-classroom features of his college life.

If, then, the thing which we value most after college life is over is not the practical but the fellowship, the social, does it not profit us to have a care that the fellowship and the social side of our college life is equally developed with the practical and academic? College is too serious a matter with a large percent of students. The sacrifice which precedes and which is necessary in order that many may enter college at all, restricts and restrains. Having hewed to the line rigidly in order to reach college, the hew to the line tendency still rules. Good students are the result. Practical values are obtained. But the social self is neglected, pushed into the background as an imperiment, and in future years when . . . students are met, there is not that shout of good fellowship which is described as the characteristic of the attitude of "Old Grads." Students who have thus starved their social selves, who have made it subsidiary to all other interests, live a life which is a trifle narrower, a little less pleasant than the man who has been, in good fellowship terms, a "mixer." If in future life the social phase is going to have predominance it behooves us to give attention to the out-of-classroom phase of college life today.—The Daily Student, Indiana University.

and non-fraternity athletic meets, culminating in a frat-barb meet on Charter Day was tried for the first time. The criticism of various faculty members and students to the effect that the plan would tend to cultivate an antagonism between the fraternity and non-fraternity elements was demonstrated to be without foundation. This year there is every indication that the meets will again be successful. Already both Greeks and bars are taking an interest in the affair and it is to be hoped that some close contests will result.

THE SENIOR PLAY.

The senior play committee have made an arrangement with Miss Alice Howell, an instructor in the university, whereby she is to receive $200 for her services in coaching the senior play. Entirely aside from the legitimacy of the arrangement, in view of the regents' action in forbidding financial transactions between faculty members and students, it is to be wondered whether or not such a charge is justified. Could not some competent coach have been secured for a less salary?

INTER-CLASS DEBATES.

With a definite constitution now at hand upon which to base the organization of the inter-class debating board no time should be lost in undertaking the work. The members of the board should be elected within a week and they should at once organize and get to work.

Already it is impossible to carry out that provision of the constitution which provides for the selection of the first question before the Christmas vacation. If the proper authorities, which in this case are the class presidents, inaugurate immediate action it will however be possible to carry out the rest of the program provided for. The inter-class debates are valuable features and the delay mittee of five which picks the orator is to be elected by the class. While it is possible that a candidate for orator might make up a slate and push through its election, it is not likely that such methods will be pursued. That would be almost too openly political tactics to secure the respect of the students for the man who would use such means to gain what is really an intellectual honor.

It is to be hoped that other classes will follow some system similar to that of the sophomores.

AN OMAHA MEET.

The scheme of a big indoor athletic meet in Omaha during March should bring gratification to every man who is interested in the Nebraska track team. The holding of such a meet in Omaha means that Nebraska's athletes will have an opportunity of testing their metal against the representatives of other schools and athletic clubs. They will gain much by competition with strong rivals which they could not gain in practice.

But more than any benefit to individuals is the gain to be made by the university. The Omaha meet, while not under the direct jurisdiction of the university, will nevertheless be popularly connected with the institution. In this way Nebraska will be favorably advertised among western athletes and to some extent over a larger field. She will be able to assume a higher rank, directly through her management of the meet as well as through the betterment which will come to her athletes.

MIX AND BE SOCIABLE.

The college educated business man takes the practical value of an education as a matter of fact. What the college educated business man clings to when again he comes into contact with his former schoolmates is not a consideration of practical values, but the sentiment, fellowship, the out-
