the hair had been resorted to, and that the only escape from endless monotony was simply to search among pictures and statues of ancient madonnas and virgins for some happy suggestion which had remained in modest retirement for a decade or two.

But a look around the campus this spring will inform one that some one has thought up a really new hair dress. The co-eds, when asked who is responsible, all affirm that they "haven't an idea." But they are blindly following, only adding a variation here and there where limited hair or that affliction known as a "cow-lick" makes necessary.

The distinguishing feature of the new hair dress is a round smooth swath beginning at the nape of the neck and covering the head like a modern dust cap, leaving just a modest fringe out in the open around the forehead. Around this coiffure is twined a braid or a twist or several rolls, or it is left unadorned save by the beauty of its own symmetry and lustre.

Certain Nebraska co-eds, when questioned on the subject, maintain

BEAUTIFUL FLUFFY HAIR.

Correspondent Tells of Queer Quirks In Co-eds' Tresses. (Special by Madam Vass.) It was thought years and years ago that every possible manner of "doing" that they are extremely satisfied with this new fashion.

"It makes us look as if we had so much hair," says one, "and it is so easy to supply—well—any needed hair we don't happen to have—you see. As to where it originated—well, some horrid person said the other day they first saw it on the clerks down at the Ten Cent Store—but then it didn't start there, for I saw that kind of a hair dress pictured on the back of a 'Delineator' at least a year ago. And you can find any number right along in the 'Ladies' Home Journal.' So we feel perfectly safe in wearing our hair that way."

Another co-ed says she likes this hair dress because it takes the place of a hat or cap.

"And it is pretty, too," she adds. "There is something artistic about it, that is, if you get it done at the right angle. The center doesn't want to be too flat or too close to the nape of the neck. It should begin an inch or two above the hair line and rise with graceful curves to a sort of climax in the center, leaving a pretty fluff around the face. The size of the hair dress should vary according to the person's face; they say your ears should not show, you know."

Thus, while it seems impossible to account for the new style, it seems also that it is a well defined one and quite comprehensible to the feminine mind.
