Lives there a student with soul so fossilized that he does not apprehend the proximity of examinations?

matters were temporarily delayed on account of a difference of view among the girls as to the code of honor to be adopted. This is a mistake. So far as the present writer is aware, there is no difference regarding the code, but much variation in the views regarding the best means of its application. So far as the girls have considered the matter at all, they agree that it is wrong to cheat or "crib" in a test or examination, to hand in as your own work a lesson that someone else has prepared for you; or to "stuff" your reports. We all agree that there is altogether too much of that kind of thing going on, that it has increased in the last few years, and that the good name of our Alma Mater will suffer if it is not stopped.

There are several suggestions as to the best way of lessening the evil, but they may be classified under two heads:

First—An opinion has been expressed by an advanced student that nothing can be done by the students themselves. (This view was new to most of us, and if it should fall under the eye of any man or woman of the faculty, I hope that it will be considered carefully.) This girl said that she thought any reform must be started by the faculty. More careful supervision would overcome the evil so far as it could be overcome, she thought; any attempt made by the students themselves would only increase the evil, as deception would be added to cheating. She thought that the "cribbers" were not thoughtless, but deliberate wrongdoers, and objected to any attempts to "make them think" before they cheat, as worse than useless. The responsibility lay upon the fac-requent meetings of this sort would be the best, and a sufficient, means of checking dishonest college work.

C. A pledge to be signed by each girl, once and for all, saying that she will not cheat; said pledge to be made clear and unmistakable and signed voluntarily or not at all.

D. A pledge to be signed on every examination paper or written lesson that is handed in, stating that no help has been given or received upon it. This is the plan followed at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, at the State University of Michigan, and various other institutions. It is favored by a number of girls here, who feel that it would make a good starting point. Others feel that it would be an insult to their dignity, and still others fear that it would degenerate into a mere form. Of course this would all depend upon the way in which it was done. The southern people, who certainly are quick to resent anything which reflects upon their honor, do not regard such a pledge as an injury at all, but rather as a safeguard to that honor. Nor has it become a mere form in any of the schools in which I have heard of its presence.

E. A pledge to be signed every time a girl registers; said pledge to be entirely voluntary, not compulsory. This is the plan carried out at some colleges, of which the nearest is Bellevue. It hardly seemed feasible at first, and some doubt was expressed as to the co-operation of the registrar's office. If the girls favor the plan, however, we can have a table off somewhere, wherever we like, managed by ourselves alone, where all girls will have

OUT.

The Cornhusker is out. No more will wandering fancy lead us to believe that it is coming out on such and such a day. We have ocular proof that it is out. No more will we wake up in the middle of the night and ask ourselves, "When is the Cornhusker coming out?" No more will that question precede the erstwhile popular one about the weather. Like Halley's comet, it was a bit uncertain for a while—but it is out.

There have been Cornhuskers and Cornhuskers, but the present publication bids fair to outrank all those of previous years in popularity. Meanwhile the university public reads but counts not the cost: The nights and nights of planning, the weeks and months of rustling copy, looking after photographs, seeing that a staff (usually developing strange and peculiar forms of invisibility) does work occasionally, trying to finance a hitherto losing proposition, talking an unwilling business man into advertising, fighting and quarreling with a host of printers, trouble with engravers, long nights of proof reading—and a critical public.

FORUM

To the Editor of the Nebraskan: Those interested in the movement for the establishing of a higher standard of honor among the women students of the university have had many inquiries lately as to what is being done now. The opinion seems to be abroad, as implied in a recent article in the Nebraskan, that ulty alone, in her opinion.

Second—The view more commonly held, so far as I can tell from comments of the girls, is that most of the cheating comes from lack of appreciation of the gravity of the offense, and that if public opinion can once be aroused, the evil will be greatly lessened. It is believed that the students hold the matter in their own hands, that it is for them to stop trying to cheat, and that the first step is to make them feel their responsibility to themselves and to their school. No one denies that the faculty must have a part in this, however. No teacher has any right to tempt his students to cheat, either by undue laxity or by over-suspicion. Co-operation there must be, in the view of the advocates of this plan, and a large part of the burden rests upon the students.

There are various methods of making the plan concrete and specific. Each of these has its advocates. I will give all that I know of, not because they all, or any of them, are ideal, but in order that the girls may be thinking about them, and improving upon them, or making better ones.

A. The plan adopted by the men's fraternities, that of reporting each other's offenses. The girls do not at present favor this plan, although it seems to the present writer to be bringing some definitely good results.

B. Reliance to be placed entirely upon mass meetings and rallies of the students, like the one held recently. These certainly increase college spirit and loyalty, and at least one girl feels that the opportunity to sign a pledge to do honest work while they are here. We have full permission of the authorities to carry out this plan if we wish to do so. The plan seems to combine some of the best features of the two preceding ones. It is far from being ideal, but the majority of the girls who have spoken to me about it at all, seem to think that it will furnish a better starting point than either of the others. It will be a sort of a warning to a girl when she first comes not to register for more work than she can properly carry. Against it is urged the view of the young lady who thinks that the whole burden lies upon the faculty. She Continued on Page 3
