CAPTAIN TEMPLE.

Thanksgiving day will mark the close of a football career of one of the greatest players that has ever worn the Scarlet and the Cream. Leroy B. Temple will play his last game at the Cornhusker institution, and then his name will have to be placed with that long list of men who have fought a good fight for the honor and the glory of the old U. of N. No longer will the referee say, "Captain Temple, are you ready?" and no longer will Captain "Jack" wave his hand in response to the arbitrator's inquiry. Time will move on and another man will wear the Scarlet and Cream and lead his cohorts into the fray with all the vengeance that only a true Cornhusker knows, but the name of Captain Temple will be among those who has served his college, and served it well.

Three years ago a freshman entered the university, and on the little green slip which was a schedule of his classes the name of Leroy B. Temple was written. As is now the case, the freshmen were not allowed the honor of being a member of the varsity team, and the man who was to be the captain of the Cornhuskers of 1910 was assigned to membership in the squad of men who were making their initial appearance in a Nebraska uniform. His popularity was soon evident and the love of the men which he carries today was soon his. Electing him captain of the freshman team, he led the Nebraska freshmen into two battles which were easily credited to the victory side of the Cornhusker ledger.

The fall of 1908 came and "Jack" Temple now had a chance to show the material of which he was built. Captain "Jack" was but a sophomore, but the wonderful ability which he had shown in his freshman year along the line of football was not to go unnoticed by the coaches. When in the great battle with Minnesota that fall he was sent to relieve the fullback, when the Gophers were attempting to pull the ball across the Cornhusker line, it was "Jack" Temple who time and time again tackled the man who was carrying the ball, and it was "Jack" Temple who helped more than can be estimated to bring to Nebraska the credit of a 0 to 0 tie with the mighty Gophers.

The season of 1909 was an eventful one for the man who was destined to be the leader of the Cornhuskers before he completed his college course. Shifted to the line, he played a game which was not equaled in the Missouri Valley, and the men who witnessed games of great importance both in this conference and in the "Big Eight," placed "Jack" Temple in the line-up of the All-Western eleven.

While critics were busy attempting to grant to this Cornhusker the honor which was due him, his teammates proved the love they had for "Jack" and elected him captain of the 1910 team. The season of 1910 has now drawn to a close, and with it the football career of one of the greatest men who ever wore the moleskins for the Scarlet and Cream school. Honest and fearless he soon won the love of the men with whom he associated on the gridiron. Quiet and unassuming, he carried with him the love of the whole student body. His efforts to win for his university were never humiliated by a single thing which could be criticised. Always attempting to do right, he would do anything which was honest and square which would bring victory to his team. All other methods which might have been employed to win were frowned upon by this man, who the whole university have learned to look to as a man of honest integrity and purpose. To Captain Temple we give our hand, and may the future bring to him the glories and honors which he has fought so valiantly to bring to his university, the old U. of N.

COACH "KING" COLE.

A season of football has passed, in which the spirit of the supporters was almost lost. The team had not been successful, and the Nebraska athletic board were casting about to secure a coach which would develop the football material of Nebraska into a football team which would win victories for the Cornhusker institution, and at the same time retrieve the defeats which the team had suffered that fall. Their selection was William C. Cole who was at that time coaching the football players of the University of Virginia. William C. Cole was brought to Nebraska in the fall of 1907, and his was the task of making a football team out of the forty men who appeared for practice at his first call. He knew none of the men as football players, and to him fell this mammoth duty. Working with the men night and day, he at last developed a team which to him seemed to be the best available at that time, and they opened the season. Not satisfied with the result, which was victory, but desiring to make use of all the men at his disposal, he shifted the line-up again and again, in his effort to get an idea as to the candidates for the team, so that he could determine the ability of each man.

This was his work the first year he was at Nebraska. The climax in the season was the Minnesota game. On this battle would depend to a large extent the result of the season, and on this this chances of remaining as the football tutor at Nebraska for another year. Minnesota was met, and the score of 8 to 5, does not measure the form displayed by the Cornhuskers in the battle in the Northland. Nebraska was able to push a man across the Minnesota goal line for a touch down, but the Gophers were unable to do so and only the booting toe of George Capron saved the Northerners from defeat. Not hesitating a moment Coach Cole renewed his efforts and developed for the Cornhusker school an eleven which won the championship of the Missouri Valley.

The second year that he was at Nebraska Coach Cole was not as successful from the view point of the men who wanted an all-victorious team. The Cornhuskers in that year, however, held Minnesota to a 0 to 0 tie, defeated Haskell, Iowa and Ames, and only through the result of the heaviest schedule a Nebraska team was ever called upon to play, did the battle with Kansas turn into a defeat for the Cornhuskers.

Not dismayed in the least Coach Cole set to work the next year to whip into shape a team which would be the best Nebraska would ever had. But his efforts were in vain. Squabbles between various members of the team, and the lack of substitutes who were of the right quality, resulted in a season which was not exactly glorious from the view point of the Nebraska supporters. However, that season taught the student body a lesson. In that they learned that the coach does not make the team, and they were almost unanimous in their desire to retain, for another year, the man who had worked to make a winning team for Nebraska for three seasons. Down town critics were open in their criticism of Coach Cole, when they did not know anything about the difficulties which had confronted him in his efforts to produce a winning team.

Faith in the man who had already led the Cornhuskers through three seasons which must be considered as fairly successful, brought William C. Cole to Nebraska for the fourth time, and this faith was rewarded with the team that has fought for Nebraska this year.

Were Nebraska his alma mater we could not sound the praises of Coach Cole higher. His manliness is apparent in his every action. On every hand he is always attempting to do that which is right and best. The endeavors of such a man should not go unrewarded. He has been with us for four years, and a better man and coach could not be desired. As tender hearted as a child, he has at the proper moment shown a spirit for enterprise and endeavor which has swept the men of the teams which he has coached, off their feet, and this spirit which fought until the whistle blew, never would say "down." When in the darkest moments of his work at Nebraska, when outside criticism seemed to bear so heavily upon the football situation, "King" Cole was always serene and calm; but underneath, his energy and enthusiasm was constantly saying that the right would finally triumph. And so it has. The season of 1910 has been one of glory and one which any coach should be proud of. It has been one of success to the Scarlet and the Cream. May we drink a toast to the health of "King" Cole, the man who does things. If he is not with us next year may his star ever be in the ascendant, and may no cloud ever pass over it and dim the brilliancy with which it now shines.

ASSISTANT COACH EWING.

While Coach Cole was attempting to get the men of the Varsity team in to shape to meet the teams of the Missouri valley in the games which had been scheduled for them, another man was working with vim and vigor to develop a team which would be able to give the varsity squad a resemblance of the battles which they would have to go through with before the season closed. This man was Harry Ewing. To him must be given the credit for developing one of the best freshman teams that has ever been turned out at the university. Harry Ewing served his first year in university football under the tutelage of Coach Cole, and easily won his position at guard for three years in succession. For two years he was considered to be the best guard in the Missouri valley. When the three years which he was allowed to serve in winning victories for his school had passed he was given the position of assistant coach. To him fell the duty of training the freshmen of the university into a machine which would work together.

That he has done this is apparent, in the many battles which the first year men have been able to give the varsity. The day has been seen at Nebraska when little attention was paid to the freshmen, and in this way noth-
