a certainty that criticism is not all on one side. The freshman law class, numbering over one hundred students, must meet in the same room for three hours in succession each morning and to relieve the monotony they indulge in a little excitement at occasional times. They perhaps might not be so boisterous in their celebrations, but the students of the other colleges who have opportunities of going to three classes in succession in as many buildings cannot appreciate the position that the law students are placed. Try it yourself, you who find fault, and see if you would not like to shake off the cares of recitations in some way. Since you cannot go from one building to another between classes, see if you wouldn't like to do a little yelling once in a while.

The whole result of the matter is that there is more genuine university spirit among the members of the college of law than in any other college in the university.

mal or not? Remember it is a matter concerning not yourself, but the university as a whole. What do the university women think of the matter? We have had the ideas of but one girl expressed, in comparison to those of a number of the university men. It would be pleasing to the school as a whole to know what the university women really think about abolishing cabs.

THE LAWS.

Time and time again severe criticism has been handed out against the students in the college of law, because it is said they made too much noise between classes. While it is recognized that it is unfortunate that this matter should come up, all sides of the question must be considered. The students in that college are confined to the third floor of University hall. Here they are not alone. The need of class rooms has resulted in the scheduling of some of the classes in the French department on that floor. This the students of the law college look upon as an infringement of their rights; but nevertheless since the French classes must meet, and as long as they are scheduled to meet in rooms which would not otherwise be used, the law students should not complain.

Again the noise and cheering between classes by the students in the law school has earned for them the name of the "rough-neck laws." It is

Goldsmith, W. W. Guidinger and Ben Cherrington have all made preparations for going to Red Cloud, Dec. 24, for the purpose of conducting evangelistic services. The character of this work is such that these Nebraska representatives will be brought in touch with boy high school students and young men about the town, whereby they may prove more influential than older workers in the field. The meetings will continue until January 1.
