will never come, for there certainly is a growing sentiment among the students in favor of being "straight." And this, after all, is the point. It makes little difference what system is adopted. Any system can be but a makeshift, and is apt to be a temporary thing. What we want is the principle, actively working here. Most of us need the support of public sentiment to help us to do the right thing. And we, you and I, and students just like us, make up the public of this University. The standard of public sentiment will be raised if we individually raise our standard.

How are we to do this? I don't know. I may have an opinion, as you may have yours, but I don't know, certainly. Many people are considering it now. It is a question that is being discussed at Wisconsin, Minnesota, Beloit and Northwestern. Many people are considering it.

As to what will be said on Thursday at our convocation, we cannot tell until we hear it. Who the speakers will be is not announced, and what stand they will take is known only to themselves. Will they speak on the principle of the thing, or will they advocate some one system? Or

THE FORUM

To the Editor of The Daily Nebraskan:

The subject of Thursday's convocation is one that should interest every student and faculty member of the University. As announced, it is a discussion of the adoption here of some form of the "honor system," so-called. What form this will be, whether that of Princeton, where it is so successful; that of the University of Virginia, where it follows the Southern tradition and is a matter-of-course like loyalty to one's state, or whether, striking out a new line for ourselves, we shall adopt some form net yet thought of elsewhere, remains to be seen.

One thing is sure, diplomas from the University of Nebraska mean nothing unless they represent honest work, individual achievement. Unless we raise our standard here, these pieces of parchment will in time cease to be desirable possessions. But in the opinion of the writer, this time will each man have a separate idea, a separate plan, and shall we be called upon to judge as to their practicability? It is we who must pass upon them; we who must act, for, ultimately, the thing will depend upon the students. "M."
