JANUARY 17, 1911.

The attention of the various candidates for class offices is called to the desire of the faculty members that these students have the proper class standing if they are elected to the positions which they are seeking. Class standing is an important matter in a question of this kind, and it would be somewhat unpleasant both for the faculty of the university and the student himself to remove an undergraduate from the office to which ball, and the interest of the student body is naturally centered in a triumph for the U. of N. Your support to the members of the team will be appreciated by the team as well as by the entire student body.

VENTILATION.

Sanitary conditions in an institution like the university are important details, to which a great deal of attention must be paid. Among the things which can be regulated by the students as well as the faculty members is proper ventilation of the recitation rooms. Forty to fifty people closely seated in a room soon use up all the oxygen, and the effect on the students is soon observed. Drowsiness is apparent, as well as listlessness. The cold weather makes it difficult to leave the windows open, and because of this many of the recitation rooms are poorly ventilated, resulting in poor work on the part of many of the students, and at the same time their interest in the lecture or recitation is almost nil. Little things like this often are a menace to health, both mentally and physically.

he was elected should the unforeseen arise, and investigation prove that he did not have the proper number of credited hours to entitle him to be a member of the class from which he was chosen.

The work of the members of the Dramatic club Saturday night in the play "Mice and Men" deserves a great deal of commendation and applause. Real talent was displayed by the members of the cast and their work as amateurs was of the highest order. It was the best production that the club has ever presented. The work of the organization was highly appreciated by the large audience which greeted them and applauded their efforts. To the coaches and the entire cast a great deal of credit is due for their work, and it was successful to a high degree.

The basketball game between the members of the university team and the Wesleyan quintet showed that the Cornhuskers are far from defeated before the season commences. While the whirlwind exhibition that Cotner put up against the Nebraskans was exceptional, the Cornhuskers still have a long time to prepare for the games which they must enter on their trip to Minnesota. Ames comes this week, and the students should give the team all the support that they possibly can. Basketball has become a game which is as thrilling and as exciting as foot-
