FAVORS SOUTHERN SYSTEM.

Dean Davis Discussed Student Honor at Convocation.

Dean Davis spoke at the convocation hour Tuesday morning, giving a brief resume of the "honor system" as it is enforced in the south, and made an urgent and frank appeal to the students of this university to follow up the example set by the southern colleges, in the way of barring students who indulge in the practice of cheating and lying.

The southerner takes as a matter of course that a man when being detected cheating should be reported immediately, according to the dean, and when once detected the offender does not think of making excuses. He knows the sentiment to be strong enough that it will be useless for him to present any defense if he is actually guilty of the offense.

"Until Nebraska students take this stand the system of honor which they are endeavoring to adopt will be a failure," said the dean. "They must exercise more charity toward independence and honest expression of opinion. Besides being instruments whereby honesty may be enforced, it is not difficult to see that a sentiment allowing such freedom will produce nothing but benefit."

Dean Davis' remarks were forceful and to the point. He was heard by a very small audience, but as Professor Grummann said, "We can not take this as a sign of indifference on the part of the students when we consider that the press of examinations and the closing up of the affairs of the semester may have afforded many a student a good excuse for not attending."
