BE NOT MISTAKEN.

The greenish hue of this issue is not meant to announce that the Nebraskan is getting fresh, no, far be it from such. It is a simple recognition of a rugged and hardy people that has been so prominent in the upbuilding of our country. Snakes and snake stories may be talked of and the snakes may all be dead in Ireland. But the Irish are with us and the serpents will put in an appearance as soon as the warm weather thaws them out. The University of Michigan claims the record in a new line of intercollegiate competition, namely, that it has the greatest number of alumni who are members of the United States congress. This fact was brought to light by the announcement of a dinner where no less than twenty-seven delegates were entertained who are now members of congress. Of the other colleges with large numbers in congress, Harvard is second, with sixteen and Yale and the University of Virginia are tied for third place with fifteen each.

Under classmen at Cornell are not allowed to wear mustaches.

Thirty-two juniors have been elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Yale.

Henry Kohman, University of Kansas, has just received the highest paid fellowship in the world, an industrial fellowship which pays $8,500 a year.

The Daily Kansan says that the thirty-five students who are up for gambling at the university should be disciplined by the game warden.

The law students of the University of Oklahoma are striving to secure an appropriation of $150,000 for the erection of a law building.

The University of Michigan's new telescope is the second largest of its kind in the country. It was designed and built almost entirely by students of the university.

The University of Chicago is having the time of its life. Woman's suffrage seems to have gained the upper hand. One day we hear of the women of the college descending on the legislature in full force, and the next, they have compelled professors to shave off their mustaches. Do the women rule?

The junior convocation was good, but it is not all of the Junior Week. There is a play which is to be given Saturday night that will eclipse everything else.

Still the bicyclers insist on having the right-of-way. Put them off! They have no business on the walks.
