OUR NEBRASKA.

It may be that the University of Nebraska has not the accommodations in the way of buildings and grounds that is the happy lot of other large institutions of its kind. But it has one thing that is greater than all the college buildings in the United States combined. It has men and women, real men and women. The students of Nebraska are loyal to their institution. They are not afraid to work for it. They have a spirit that cannot be judged by yells and cheers. They can do more than yell—they can work.

You are comrades in one great work and need each other's help and friendship. Do not be cold and reserved—say "hello" to your fellow-man and fellow-woman.

A SAD EVENT.

One sad event marked the great holiday. The pessimist appeared. While the plans were being formulated and put before the students, he said it was a crazy, useless idea that would come to naught. While the others were scattered over the lawn cutting out the obnoxious weeds, he stayed at home or walked by, casting his sneering glances hither and thither. It was only in the case of extreme and hopeless pessimism that this was true, for all others could not resist the temptation to work.

The pitiful plight of these creatures can hardly be realized. They take themselves so serious that it is hard to aid them. We have searched medical lore in vain for a cure and have at last been compelled to suggest that originated by a modern philosopher, which is briefly this: Let the one afflicted seek some quiet spot in the mountains away from the trials and tribulations of man. Let him pitch his tent beside a cool mountain torrent where the clear water rushes by on its way to the sluggish stream. Then let him commune with nature, seeking out a nice quiet pool of considerable depth and putting his head clear under the water, remain in this position without moving for four hours each day until the cure is effected.

The dandelion committee is to be congratulated on its efforts which have been prolific of such great results. Each member has worked hard during the past few days. Each is deserving of the thanks and commendations of every student of the university as well as the faculty and the citizens of Lincoln. They have taken up something entirely new with little of attractiveness about it, and made a grand success of it in a few hours.

Dandelion day was a grand success, due to their enterprise and industry. It has brought forth a virtuous enthusiasm that many believed had never existed. Dandelion day is one of the landmarks along the path of its history, and let us hope that those who come in the succeeding years will be as enthusiastic and as broad spirited as those who are with us today. Let us hope that Dandelion day is to become an annual affair and that the twenty-eighth of April, 1911, will live on as long as our university lasts. In time the dandelions will be exterminated. But some other method of improving the campus can be devised. Let the chancellor each year declare the last Friday in April as Dandelion day. The students have proven that they are worthy of consideration by the initiative they have taken in this affair.

The results of yesterday will be many and far reaching. Never before have all students seemed to feel that they had so much in common; that their interests and their hopes were kindred. They met like friends of long acquaintance and each knew the other. This is the broader Nebraska spirit. Let us make it grow. Remember those whom you saw at work among the dandelions. Always speak to them when you pass. Be friends.
