INTERESTING PROGRAM HEARD BY THE WORKERS

mulations from the same shall be used for the erection of a state medical school at Lincoln, this gift to be in aid of legislative enactment.

My leaves because they are green and irregular I bequeath to Dean Fordyce of the school of education, and it is my will that he make use of his large books on pedagogy and by pressing my leaves between his leaves in the most tender and affectionate manner. But the dry or yellow and streaker, unuseful and unfruitful leaves, I bequeath to Professor Engberg, from which he may make a sweet tea to soothe his troubled nerves at afternoon matinees.

The sap that flows through my veins, in fact my very life blood, I bequeath to Dr. Maxey because it has always been fresh and necessary; also because it pervades all parts and understands the ins and outs of international disputes between air, earth and water. To Professor Dales of the chemistry department I bequeath all my physical energy as a plant; I am not sure that he can use this, but I have considered the question and have decided that most any kind of energy would be a happy thought.

My fighting ability to the members of the faculty on the committee of fifty.

It is my will that Miss Ensign, the dean of women, and Mr. Harrison, the registrar, be given my blossom in trust in consideration that I have a dry, sweet, automatic smile for every one, and that the same trust be subject to the following instruction and discretion: After allowing an autopsy by Dr. Bessey, made for the advancement of botanical science. The petals for the use of Miss Hunter that she may use the same for an inspiration of a new classical Latin poem; the pistils to Commandant Yates, that they ward off all approaching danger. The stamens I bequeath to the library force, for they are the busy bees who buzz around and get the pollen of truth scattered upon the fertile soil of brain cells that still have within them the motive to work and exercise themselves.

The seed I bequeath to the bald-headed professors of the faculty, that they may sprinkle the seed upon the alkali spots and break up the soil in such a manner as to be able to raise the silver locks so justly their dues. The smell of the flower I bequeath to Professor Frye, head of the rhetoric department. May its fragrance sweeten the pipe dreams of the future and bring back happy reflections of the testator who has so bountifully remembered him. I want him to enjoy this legacy, even if he has to resort to the courts of law for the vindication of his rights, attorney's fees to be advanced out of the bequest.

The gentle breezes that have fanned me and carressed me from infancy up I bequeath to Doctor Condra, dean of hot air. And now be it remembered by my executors that all not herein disposed of both real and personal, mostly personal, I bequeath as a residue to Chancellor Avery to hold in trust for the promotion of the anti-dandelion league, and should anything fall into the residue, it is my will that a bond be required of him for twice the amount to assure proper expenditure.

Adam Dandelion.

We, the undersigned, at the testator's request and in his presence and in the presence of each other, hereby certify that the testator, Adam Dandelion, declared, acknowledged and signed the above instrument to be his last will and testament. We further certify that at this time he appeared to us to be of sound mind and capable of making his will.

Assignments Made.

Guy C. Kiddoo of the work committee then read the class assignments. Each class was given a portion of the campus to clean, but if they had time they were to help other classes who were slow. The campus was about equally divided and the class lines were not followed closely. The crowd then dispersed with a cheer. Enthusiasm was rampant all during the exercises, three cheers being given for all the speakers and the band. While the work was going on the band was seated in chairs in the center of the campus and played pieces all during the working.

After Work.

At 3:30 the chapel bell was rung and the few who were still searching stray plants that had been skipped came in and all made a run for the refreshment stand, where ice cream cones were being dealt out by the young women of the refreshment committee. The crowd then gathered around the steps of University hall for the remainder of the program. The Glee club sang two selections, which drew great applause from the audience.

The chairman introduced Dr. A. L. Bixby of the State Journal, who is a well known foe of the dandelion. Dr. Bixby read an original poem, "Owed to the Dandelion." Dr. Bixby said he did not think he could make the crowd hear, but all would probably enjoy it better if such were the case. He said he knew something about dandelions. He had looked them up in the dictionary and found that the genus was Taraxacum. He said if he had been fixing the genus he would have made it worse than that.

Taps were blown by Bugler Erskine and the dandelions were pronounced dead.

Chancellor Avery.

Chancellor Avery was then introduced. He said it was the custom to confer degrees on occasions of this kind and after reciting a lot of Latin-German lingo he conferred the degree of Dandelion Poet Laureate upon A. L. Bixby. He had a great yellow sheet of paper with a bunch of dandelions pinned on as a seal. The chancellor said he had found that if the students would not work on school days, give them a holiday and they would work hard. He thanked all those who had helped in the afternoon's work. He paid a compliment to the Nebraskan for the work it had done in making the day a success. He said this was the only paper he knew whose yellowishness was all right. He also thanked the band for the music they had furnished, and the Glee club. Dr. Avery said that once when he saw the women working rather hard and the young men not seeming to be so busy, he wondered if the band was playing "Let the Women Do the Work."

The exercises closed with the singing of "The Cornhusker" by all present.
