SO WAGS THE WORLD.

It rained. Ivy day with the laughter and joy could not survive. So it wilted. And great was the wilting thereof, but mightier was the sorrow and disappointment it brought. For a whole year we had looked forward to this holiday, and so the hopes of a year were drowned. But Ivy day will soon be restored and we must not mourn. Be optimistic. The rain was needed and it did others a great deal of good, and so wags the world. The committee has been put to an

Kansas; get out and root; cheer for Nebraska and her athletes; be enthusiastic and bring your friends. We must beat Kansas.

With a victorious track team and a winning tennis aggregation the Cornhuskers have no reason to complain. The football team came out of the season with championship honors, and while the basketball team was not so fortunate, it defeated the champion Jayhawkers in three games out of four played. Both debating teams received decisions over their opponents. There is no necessity to ask where Nebraska is.

The business management of the Cornhusker made a wise decision when the plan of giving out the 1911 year book at the senior play was abandoned. The Oliver theater is no place for distribution, and when the subscribers get the Cornhusker they want to read it and not watch a play. The benefit will be great on all sides. This would be discrimination against those who will be unable to attend the play that evening. Doubtless a majority of those present will not be subscribers, for many students have announced their intentions of attending the matinee, because they "do not want to put on swallow tails and sideboards."

KANSAS AGAIN.

Next Saturday our old foe and hereditary enemy will be on Nebraska field. The Jayhawkers are coming with evil thoughts in their minds and many schemes in their repertoire of strategy—they are determined that our track team, which triumphed so gloriously over Ames, is going to meet defeat. Is it? Well, not if we know the Cornhuskers. It must still linger in our memory how the southern athletes were going to make so many touchdowns in a football game last fall. Perhaps you remember what they did and better what they did not.

Watch the records go to smash next Saturday, and by the way, you must see it with your own eyes. Last spring McGowan set a new record in the meet at Des Moines, but Anderson is going to lower it this week. There are a few surprises from other directions. We have the track team and each man is going to do his part to win. But the student body of Nebraska must help. Some good cheering goes a long way. It encourages the men. Do your part to help beat
