THE DAILY NEBRASKAN.

If you are reading this, you hold in your hand the official daily organ of the University of Nebraska.

It is the best or the worst as the case may be, that Nebraska affords as a means of general information.

panacea than a scowl, but there is no vitriol in our pens, no lye in our type, and we are far more eager to commend than to condemn.

We would like to agree with everyone, but this is Earth, you know, and experience has proven that impossibilities exist, so that it will be our endeavor first to agree with the majority; then with as many as we can; and finally with those who have the present and future of the University most in hand and at heart.

a breadth of social feeling and widen the members' social sympathies rather than narrow them.

"The whole distinction," he said, "between Greek and barbarian should for the most part be wiped out of the student's consciousness. Let these organizations remain and increase in numbers, but let the standard for scholarship and for the wholesome social life, not for the monopolizing of student society."

The question of student honor was touched upon with some point. For 1415 O--Hatter, Furnisher, Shoes and Ladies' Sample Shoe Man.

It is published by a staff chosen through the medium of combined students and faculty organized in a publication board.

Its general purpose is, we believe, to form a mouthpiece through which University news and University views upon various topics, may be conveyed both to the students and those outside the matriculated body, free from color or exaggeration.

It attempts to voice the feelings of the clear, straight-thinking majority of faculty or students, or both, and has neither time nor space for the ill-founded complaints of the disgruntled few.

Its only policy is the policy of progress and development that is necessary in order to keep up with the advances of its parent institution.

Its only object is to promote better understanding between faculty and student; between student and student; between both and the citizenship of the state.

To portray a truthful picture of University life and activities through the medium of actual happenings from day to day is its mission. In order to do this, it must have the undivided support, and confidence of student and professor. Both must realize that the paper is actually put out by those who like themselves, are but human, and prone to make mistakes, be the intent ever so worthy.

We are not "muck-rakers"; we are not "yellow." Nothing could be more deplorable in such a paper. But we do wish to interest our readers, and we believe that no little good can be done by the gentle poking of a little good natured fun here and there. We believe that to be made ludicrous is to be cured; that a laugh is a better the most part he attributed to Nebraska students a certain tendency against doing the dishonest thing and sought consolation in the fact that wrong doing with the average student was accompanied by a feeling or tinge of remorse. He plead, however, for an earnest devotion to the proper ideal, that of absolute honesty in college work.

In Defense of Athletics.

Touching upon athletics, Dr. Avery defended that department against its many critics. He considers it a proper function of our college life because it localizes and regulates the students inherent sportive inclinations instead of letting them run rampant as is often the case where athletics are discouraged.

In conclusion he urged that the Nebraska student keep uppermost in his own mind the highest purpose of the University, that of service. "The responsibility rests within the student body itself, and just as it molds a wholesome student sentiment, so will it make Nebraska worthy of the support and praise of the great state which it represents."

Infirmary at Minnesota.

Minnesota University has recently dedicated a student infirmary containing 115 beds, with operating rooms and all the facilities of a modern hospital. The greater part of the $155,000 expended on the building was a bequest.

MILITARY DEPARTMENT ADDRESS

CAPTAIN YATES ADDRESSED THE FIRST-YEAR CADETS TUESDAY.

Captain Halsey E. Yates, commandant of cadets, addressed the Freshmen of the regiment in Memorial hall at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Captain Yates spoke not only as an officer of the regular army and a member of the faculty, but as a Nebraska man.

He spoke on the tendency of new students to be lacking in the respect shown on the campus toward the chancellor and other University officials, and compared the present with the years when he was in college. At that time he said, the students were more careful, and were accustomed to tip their hats to the chancellor and the professors.

Captain Yates also announced that all men would be served with guns tomorrow evening. This is said to be the first time that pieces have been issued to new men at this time of the year.

Will Hold Reception.

There will be a reception at the United Brethren church tonight in honor of their new pastor and the new students. University friends are invited.
