TUESDAY, OCT. 3, 1911.

Nebraska is brim full of organizations of all kinds. There are fraternities and sororities, debating societies and literary societies; class societies and inter-class societies; in fact, almost every brand of organization known to collegiate life—except a Nebraska Society.

All these bodies are supposedly at work for something or other looking toward the betterment of some one or something. As a matter of fact, however, all seem to be working for themselves, so far as any apparent improvement in general university conditions is concerned.

Why should we not have at Nebraska a sort of club, or meeting place, situated near the campus, and convenient to all. A refuge for the hard-pressed gate-smokers; a rendezvous for those bent on making or keeping dates; a meeting place for Nebraska's most valuable asset, her general student body, wherein freshmen and non-frat men smokers and abstainers, students and professors might come closer together.

It has often been said that Nebraska is lacking in college spirit.

We contest this, but are forced to admit that those instincts and traditions that lead to the development of such intensely loyal college spirit as is found at some of the other great institutions of learning could be much more highly developed at Nebraska if some such student Utopia as we have attempted to describe were available as a center of student activities.

We are too much split up. We lack unity. Our general organization tends rather to the fostering of rivalry than of concentric endeavor for the college as a whole.

Such conditions certainly are not to be desired. We should all work first and foremost for Nebraska.

MANY WOULD DEBATE.

Large Squad Registers With Professor Fogg for Tryout.

More than twenty-five candidates for positions on Nebraska debating teams have signified their intention of trying out by registering under Prof. M. M. Fogg, head coach. A few of these are former team men, but the great majority are new to collegiate debating.

The list to date is as follows: A. R. Raymond, C. L. Rein, C. L. Clarke, R. W. Garrett, R. E. Halldorson, Harold J. Burtis, '13, Earl M. Cline, Law '13, Clarence L. Couter, Law '13, Earl M. HEALTH QUESTION UP AGAIN.

State Teachers to Consider Condition of College Students.

At the annual meeting of the State Teachers' association in November, the question of inspecting the students of all the Nebraska colleges as to general health, heart, lung and eye troubles, will be resurrected after two years of sleep. A resolution recommending such inspection was unanimously passed at the 1909 convention, but was afterwards shelved. The resolutions committee consisted of Dean Bessey, chairman, and Professors Grummann and Orr.

The question of a general reorganization will also come up before the convention, which meets at Omaha this year. The college section is in charge of W. R. Jackson, state food
