

WOMEN AT FOOTBALL GAMES

"Co-Eds" Should Express Enthusiasm at Gridiron Contests, Say Some Educators.

A few days ago Miss Ida Comstock, dean of women at the University of Minnesota, following a football game at which the co-eds made considerable demonstration, declared that "women should not cheer at football games. It is unwomanly. They should confine themselves to the singing of college songs and waving of their college banners."

Opinions on the subject from college authorities and others of educational institutions vary. In some instances the contention of Miss Comstock is upheld, in others opposed, and in others no special opinion is expressed. The coeds of Butler college, in Irvington, don't believe it unwomanly to give vent to their feelings at a football game. One girl, who evidently expressed the feelings of a majority of them, exclaimed:

"Go to a football game and not have a right to cheer! Why you might as well try to hold a sewing circle and attempt to keep the women from talking. We girls can't help it when we yell at a football game. We couldn't keep from cheering even if we tried ever so hard, and I wouldn't think much of the girl who didn't. I can't see how it can be construed unwomanly to cheer at a game."
