We regret to learn of the death of W. F. Mayland of the Medical College. Mayland was a student who was both a friend to his friends and also worthy of the love and respect of his acquaintances. We want to extend to his loved ones our most heartfelt sympathy in this their loss.

when Christmas runs its course, let us tell you what to do. Just give one tear for these dismal ones, who from the city are not wont to roam; just sigh one sigh, for these freezing sons, who are here and can't go home.

THE ONES YOU LEFT BEHIND.
 The Merry Christmas has now passed; we've greeted the glad New Year; the "grinds" begin to assemble here at last—the coming exams once more to fear. They had a good time they all allege while at home for the holidays; from dances and parties not one did hedge while the Christmas spirit was the craze. They tell of happy sketches they each put on, with twinkling eye and laughter most sincere; yea, they tell of stunts that lasted 'most till dawn when the world is full of spectres most strange and queer. But who took time to give a passing sigh for the dismal ones gayly left behind, who bravely kept the frat house, chilled, hard-by, where no warmth or lights dared shine? Who, with freezing feet and frosted mitt, sought comfort in an early ill-clothed bed, e'en before the evening lamps were lit, their pallid glow upon the streets to shed. Yet 'twas warmer there than staying up to hear the frozen steam pipes burst, or to drink the Christmas spirit from an icy cup, when all was free from cheerful Christmas thirats. Nor were there any pretty wreathes or holly to adorn our glazy window sash. No! we were busy keeping warm, by golly! We had no time for useless trash! So now a moral let us give forth, and listen, blithesome brother true, next year,
