OUR LAST WORD.

With this issue the men and women who have had charge of the production of the Daily Nebraskan for the past half year retire officially, and either return to take over new duties and honors, or turn over the pens and decrepit typewriters to another staff. The next issue of the Nebraskan, on the Tuesday following the opening of the second semester, will be in charge of the new editor and his corps. These men and women have been selected by the publication board after what has probably been the keenest

The retiring editor wishes to say on behalf of himself and his staff that each and every one of us who now have become "has-beens" are deeply appreciative of the kindness and courtesy that have been extended us undergraduates and alumni alike. We secretly hope that we may have done each of you, and Nebraska, some trifling service, and are sure that you have earned our lasting regard.

It is our hope and wish that during his many coming years, both as student and in business, you may keep in your purse a couple of dollars, and in your heart a warm spot for the use and credit of the "Rag."

THE EDITOR.

competition in the recent history of the Nebraskan, and one and all are able, competent, and willing.

Mr. Dinsmore, to whom has been entrusted the handling of the helm, has had several years' experience in the publication of high school and University papers, and enters upon his new duties as the reward of faithful and competent service. During the past semester he has been managing editor of the Nebraskan, and has filled the difficult requirements of that position with much credit to himself, and I am sure with more to the credit of the paper. It is to his efforts that the improved appearance of the sheet is due and under his own system I believe he will effect even greater improvements in this line and others. For one thing, he contemplates increasing the size of the news-page, and consequently the efficiency of the paper, in that more space will be available and crowding so necessary of late, will to a large extent be done away with.

His news staff has been selected upon a merit basis and after keen competition, and for those who have worked during the past semester, at least, it is safe to say, the paper has suffered none by their retention.

The establishment of a Literary department under Mr. Holmes cannot but add interest, as it will furnish a means of expression to material plentiful throughout the year, but barred heretofore from the paper on account of the lack of a suitable man to exploit and develop it, as well as by the shortness of space. Mr. Holmes has every qualification to make the new department a success.

WEAVER GOES TO WASHINGTON

Chosen to Professorship in State College at Pullman.

J. E. Weaver, '09, who recently took his A. M. degree in botany, has been elected assistant professor in botany in the Washington State College at Pullman, Wash.

Mr. Weaver is a Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi student. Since graduating he has been an instructor in the Aurora and Lincoln high schools. He will leave for Pullman this week.
