

ABOUT PEOPLE

Randall Curtis, who was graduated at the mid-year commencement, has gone to Omaha, where he will enter business.

E. E. Dale, Eng. '12, is working on a thesis to determine the effects of the velocity flow of hot gases and air on the co-efficient of heat transmission through boiler tubes. This is an important engineering question, and although it has been investigated by many men, Dale is carrying it further, and considering it from a somewhat new point of view. But few seniors have elected theses thus far, but the number is increasing, due, for one thing, to improved facilities for original work.

Doesn't Like Change.

Coach Richards of Wisconsin thinks the new football rules are unfair to the smaller schools because a premium is placed upon beef rather than brains. The change advocated, he says, is little short of revolutionary to the present tendency in football, and it will take us back to the old line bucking game of 1893.
