ANOTHER ASPIRANT.

Nebraska's title to the Missouri Valley championship is being disputed by another ambitious institution. This time the challenge comes from our immediate neighbor—Wesleyan. Although this school is not in the Missouri Valley conference, its members are firmly imbued with the idea that they have a right to contest for the championship, and furthermore, that, had they the right to do so, the title would easily fall their way.

The following article, which appeared in the last issue of their publication, voices the sentiment which exists there. We give the Wesleyanites credit for having an unusually strong team, but at the same time wish to call their attention to the fact that the Lincoln Y. M. C. A., who beat them by a small margin, was beaten by Nebraska 55 to 29, and that Grinnell, over whom the Wesleyanites claim several hard won victories, was beaten by Ames, whom Nebraska swamped in four straight games. We realize that comparative scores are deceiving, but quote them, in this instance, because they are the only available means of comparison. Wesleyan was offered a game early in the season, which it refused, now when the Cornhusker management is having great difficulty in arranging a championship series with Kansas, the Wesleyanites demand a game, not by issuing a direct challenge, but through the columns of their paper.

Coach Stiehm has definitely announced that no such game will be scheduled at this time owing to the lateness of the season, but that if the Coyotes feel equally pugnacious next fall their demands will be met. The following is an excerpt from an article in the Wesleyan publication:

"The Wesleyan basketball team is, naturally, a modest and shy pack of Coyotes, as everyone knows, but with such a record of victories to her credit as has been won this season, she would be backward indeed if she didn't claim a few laurels which she feels she has a right to. The first of these is the inter-collegiate championship of Nebraska. No one will dare question this, we take it, in view of the record of no defeats or near-defeats and with only one game yet to play. But the Coyotes have another idea about the basketball situation in this region that they have been thinking about pretty seriously for some time without saying very much about it, and this is that they can win the Missouri Valley championship if they are given the chance.

"Now, there is just one way to settle the question as to whether they can support their claim and that is to play a game with the University of Nebraska, who are ostensible champions. Nothing would please the Coyotes better than just such an occurrence, in fact, they have done about all in their power to get it to occur. The faint objection heard so far is that the Cornhuskers don't want to play it on Wesleyan's floor. As for that, Wesleyan is willing to play two games with them, one on each floor, but if only one game is to be played, we do think it ought to be at Wesleyan, for the Coyotes played on the Lincoln floor last year."

NEBRASKAN HELPED ROBERSON

George H. Linniger Gave Traveler First Financial Backing.

Frank R. Roberson, whose travelogues at the Auditorium have been well attended, is a college man. He is particularly a Nebraska man, for it was in this state that he received his first backing as a traveler and explorer, George H. Linniger, of Omaha, having given him the capital necessary to start him out on his educational expeditions.

Mr. Roberson has found time in his busy life to write a text book on travel. It is not a compilation of dry facts and statistics, but narrative in form and quite interesting. He was induced to do this at the request of Prof. George H. Thomas, ex-Nebraska University '96. It is interesting to know that, having traveled through all the cities of any considerable size in the United States, he has appeared before the people of Lincoln oftener than those of any other city.
