

FAIR ATTENDANCE K. A. GAME

One Thousand Nine Hundred Spectators View Last Saturday's Fray. Far Under Expectations.

The attendance at the Kansas Aggie game last Saturday was a little over 1,900 persons. For the second game of the season this number is fairly good, as very few out-of-town fans attend the opening games, preferring to wait until the last two or three games. The gain in attendance over that of the Bellevue game was about 800.

Season tickets are still being sold by Manager Reed, although they will soon be withdrawn. About 800 have been sold so far.

LISTEN FRESHMEN

It is well that the youngster should hear this, even in so exciting a moment; but there is something else for his ears, something of equal value. This is the voice of the older brother who has gone through it all, has had his four years within the gates, and has learned from men as well as from books.

He is not the one to talk of books and classrooms, rather it is for him to put his arms around the shoulders of the younger one and tell him of the personal things the class and the college expect from him. His advice is, in his own words, "how to make good," how the youngster should bear himself in the first glowing years so that he shall not "queer" himself with his fellows; how he may achieve an honorable place, an enviable place, in the undergraduate body.

Thus it is in this spirit, the spirit of the elder brother to the younger, that these articles about honor and aim and the manly things have been written by men who have lived their four years within the formidable gates.
