A PARTING WORD.

The policy of the Nebraskan during the past semester has been to analyze conditions as they exist a Nebraska, and to suggest a remedy whenever we thought any good might he obtained by so doing. Nebraska is yet young in the development of an ideal student community. At present we are a student body composed of three thousand souls representing a variegated combination of ideas and ideals. We are here to reap the benefit of a great public endowment, seeking either directly or indirectly an advanced education. Our life here is predicated on a perfect condition of equality, wherein the gift of opportunity is given alike to every student, and where each career, commensurate with like ability and effort, is left to be rounded to its fullest extent. Yet it cannot be said that the students are united, that they act as one, or are possessed of any spirit or ideals that are common to all.

The students are not to be blamed or criticised for this condition. With them it is a matter of temperament, a
