

AGREE TO EXTENSION.

ing fund of not less than two million five hundred thousand dollars was provided within six years. At the same time it declared that the immediate settlement of the question was imperative. A faculty of commanding ability, the necessary buildings and equipment make a great university on any site. The University of Nebraska possesses men of ability, but it does not afford them the facilities required for effective work. The foundation departments of the college of agriculture and of the scientific courses in the arts college—botany and chemistry—are not provided with rooms and equipment to properly accommodate one-half of the present attendance. Other important departments are in the same plight. These conditions together with a salary schedule lower than the schedule of state universities with which the Nebraska institution ought to take rank, are making it increasingly difficult to attract and retain leaders in their special field.

The change of site recommended by the board on the condition stated has not met with the approval of all the friends of the University. There are loyal sons who sincerely believe that the present site should be retained. The revenue branch of the legislature has defeated removal, partly on the ground no doubt of the expense, partly on the ground that it believed there were serious objections. It has nevertheless passed a bill which will give the University immediate and substantial relief. It will provide the building of laboratories and equipment necessary for efficient instruction. If this bill is approved by the other branch of the legislature, the controversy is at an end, and the progress of the University is assured.

The board of regents under the constitution of the state is charged with the responsibility of conserving the interests of the state's chief educational institution. Should it continue to insist that its choice of a site be considered after the pressing needs of the institution are substantially supplied, it might become responsible for a controversy that would deprive the University of necessary support for years. In view of the fact that removal was defeated by the preceding legislature, that it is opposed by the governor, that the revenue branch of the present legislature is overwhelmingly against it, that a prolongation of the issue over the site might involve the university in a long and fruitless controversy, the board has reached the conclusion that the house measure should be supported. It therefore urges every friend of the institution to unite on this bill, which affords substantial relief and gives the hard working and faithful instructors of the institution the long wished for opportunity to teach under conditions that make efficient work possible.

In giving its endorsement to the House bill, the board assumes that it is the intention that the proceeds of the half mill shall be expended for permanent improvements at the Farm as well as on the city campus and that the policy of the board to provide liberally for special agricultural activities is to continue."

Unanimously adopted by the Board of Regents.

We concur with our colleagues in the foregoing statement because of the fact that if consolidation can not be brought about at the state farm we are most anxious to see provision made for the safe housing of the professors and student-body on the city campus. The conditions which exist there are a most serious menace to life and health, and we desire also that a definite and fixed policy of university development shall be brought about at this time. The legislature deciding that consolidation is not desirable, we earnestly hope that the best interests of the agricultural college will be conserved and nothing done which will interfere with its usefulness to the people of the state.

sity to come here and start a school of music and the promise was made to him that credit for work in his school would be given by the University to his pupils. Two years ago this affiliation was brought to an end and since that time the school has been operating independently.

Representative Burket defended Mr. Kimball's school. He said that the bill would require the change in the name of a long standing corporation of good reputation. The bill would detract from the enrollment of the school to the advantage of the rival school and to several music teachers in cities in Nebraska where Mr. Kimball has established accredited branches of his school.

Mr. Rhine states that he did nothing to get the bill introduced, but that he sent a letter to the house after the bill had been introduced, and recommended that it be passed.

Mr. Kimball has prepared a letter which will be placed before every representative today. This letter will set forth the facts of the case as he views them.
