It would seem perfectly consistent with established habits of University recreation, that the University provide for the dance it tolerates.

To refloor the armory would cost much less than we now pay in rent for down town halls. The biggest single piece of work is to clean up the armory It would take at least six months of hard work to remove the accumulations of sweat and filth that for more than twenty years have made the gym nasium a veritable pest house. The next big job is the regirder and refloor the armory. It might even be necessary to take out the permanent partition between the chapel and the gymnasium and substitute in its place the rolling partition. Minor improvements such as dressing rooms, cloak rooms, sitting rooms and the like might also prove an indispensable convenience. It is estimated that the cost of all this work of making the armory a modestly suitable place for a University will be four thousand dollars; or only five hundred dollars more than the amount of rent annually extorted from University students for the same purpose by the Lincoln hotel.
