Senior Announcements Remain Uncalled for At Nebraskan Office

There are a number of Senior invitations that were ordered some time ago still in the hands of the committee and they must be gotten as soon as possible. If they are not called for before the first of next week they will be sold to those who failed to order and are desirous of securing extra invitations.

Orders for announcements should be left with the chairman of the committee at least two days before the date they are desired. Being printed here in town, they can be secured on two days' notice.

The invitations may be gotten at The Daily Nebraskan office any afternoon this week between the hours of two and four. They will be some one on hand to collect your money and hand out the necessary cards.

"leading citizens" out of. We are fated to go back home to introduce the visiting congressmen and to preside over the republican town meeting. We are to be the leaders, broad and well balanced. Are parties at Folsom's, "Jit" shows, and bench, work the sort of antidotes for the class room bromide that will make of us these well balanced pilot? In the dead silence one or two small voices answer weakly but audibly, "No."

One of these is a pleasing voice which strikes our ears harmoniously. And strange as it may seem it comes from that source and haven of unholy noises, the Conservatory. That voice is Music and it calls for the place which it should have in the development of our country's "best."

Its voice is most distinct at this time and the Junior and Senior classes have heard the call and harkened to it. This Music is a kindly benefactor and has offered its best, for no return, in order that the upper classes may close the year at peace with the Lincoln hotel and the Oliver theatre.

They have heard. Now listen, all of you. The Junior-Senior benefit Musicale comes Saturday evening. Miss Chapman has made a record with her voice in New York City which is remarkable and the university should be proud that it has an interest in her. Her services are volunteered and the proceeds go to the two classes entirely. The evening will be decidedly THE social affair and it is a chance for a date which is worth while and furthermore which is cheap. Remember, Saturday evening, at the Temple and the price is 25 cents. There will be no reserved seats.

doubly sought. Imperceptibly and pleadingly persuasive was her manner of choosing between the platonic admiration of the bare quality love as possessed by the visionary young poet and the vital friendship between husband and wife that grows from years of contact and sacrifice in each other's behalf. Than her rendition, the play itself is no more vivid. From her performance was chiefly gained that distinctive quality of realism.

Other characters are in the play itself of equal conspicuity. There was Don Marcellus as Rev. James Mavor Morrell, the husband, whose professional solicitude for human welfare generally portrayed with all the effectiveness, vigor and ardor that characterized his solicitude for his own home. F. C. McConnell, as Eugene Marchbanks, was the dreamer, the poet, the man who loved "Candida" not for her sake, but for love's sake, and who acted so genuinely that the audience seemed never to be in doubt as to what his real feelings toward the heroine were. Then there was Harold Mulligan as "Lexy Mills," a conventional appearing accessory to the drama and an effectively indifferent suitor of the crabbed and sarcastic stanographer of the preacher's. "Proserpine Garnett," or really Miss Essie Jones. So exceptional was the workmanship of these actors in common with that of Robert Gerlaw in the role of "Mr. Burgess," capitalistic and individualistic and a "scoundrel" and father of "Candida," that were it not for the program in hand one would scarcely have known the personnel.

The workmanship of this play as expressed by the faces and words of those who observed, does credit to the gratuitous efforts of the coach, Miss Florence Farman, and Stage Manager Clark.

The Senior class held a meeting in the Temple theatre yesterday morning at 11:30, and the class voted to assess its members $2.00 each for the benefit of the Senior play.
