REGISTRATION STRONG ON VERY FIRST DAY

No Decrease in Numbers Noted—Many Freshmen "Going Through" Please Bessey.

In spite of the "bear" stories originating from various sources as to the probable effect of the drouth on registration, the first day showed no appreciable decrease in the number of students scattered about the campus and various buildings, busily arranging schedules and class cards. No figures are as yet obtainable from the office of the Registrar, but those who have handled the students for years are united in saying that the first day's crowd fully equals that of any former year, and that this is particularly so of the first-year students.

Registration in the morning was rather light, but a steady increase was noted until by the middle of the afternoon A 103 was filled to capacity, and a long line had formed in the hallway. Two hundred and fifty students, exclusive of freshmen, filled out their slips and payed their fees at the treasurer's office during the day. No tab is kept on the freshmen, but a large number were noticed going through the mill. Dr. Bessey strolled through the Administration hall during the rush hour, and sizing up several groups of freshmen, expressed his hearty approval. "A fine looking bunch," he said, nodding in the direction of an especially lively group. "I like to see them."

Fred Spear, Law, '13, is taking special work at a local business college.
