FOOTBALL FACTS

By
H. V. HARLAN

Before the Iowa game Coach A. A. Stagg is credited with saying that should Iowa play Chicago last Saturday that the Hawkeyes would defeat the Maroons. Such being the case—how many guesses will you need to ascertain what would happen if the mighty Cornhuskers should play Chicago next Saturday? Would they smash the Midwayites? That will do, thank you. The eyes have it.

Again the Drake Spanish athlete is out of the ring. He says in his paper last week: "—If Kansas defeats Missouri, then Nebraska has a clear title to the championship honors and every school in the conference will doff their hats to Stiehm's champs. If Missouri wins, the title will be in a hopeless tie." Nothing is hopeless, Ethelberte, except Drake.

The would-be sport writer goes on to warble thusly: "Nebraska has already claimed the title on the strength of the fact that she has not been defeated by a valley team in the last two years." Permit us to correct you, Ethelberte, you should have said for the last FOUR YEARS. "Such silly twaddle is not taken seriously by the other conference schools—" of course Drake does not take it seriously because they did not play Nebraska this year; had they done so they would have taken it very seriously, yes we might say, extremely seriously.

But of all the bone-headed, scatter-brained, pitiful arguments ever penned by an alleged dopest, the following by Ethelberte of the Drake Delphic takes the crown: "One authority jokingly remarked that because Boston won the world's series last year is no reason why she should be given it this year, a remark whose application is very plain." Such ignorance and innocence is a scarcity. Boston lost the championship because she was beaten by better teams. But how does that apply to Nebraska? Has she been beaten by a conference team this year? Not that anybody noticed. And the Cornhuskers will keep the championship until they are defeated by a conference team.

But Ethelberte is not yet through. He says: "To look at matters closely there is little to choose between the two teams and unless Kansas wins tomorrow, Missouri will have a better claim to the title for she will have defeated a stronger group of teams than did the Cornhuskers, and will also have defeated a greater number of conference teams than Stiehm's pupils." Well, well, didjagit that? A stronger group of teams, forsoothe. Meaning Drake, Ethelberte? Nebraska defeated both Ames and Kansas by larger scores than did Missouri. 'Tis true that the Tigers also defeated Drake and Washington, but who would have the supreme gall to call these two schools strong in face of their season's records. On the other hand Nebraska defeated the Kansas Aggies, a much stronger team, bye the bye, than either Drake or Washington.

It seems, Ethelberte, that you stepped off. But try again, you'll learn. Really you are interesting and at times show signs of almost human intelligence.

Well, who's the first would-be sport writer to claim that Nebraska's victory over Iowa was a fluke?

After witnessing the magnificent victory of the Cornhuskers over the Hawkeyes we have but one regret—and that is because we didn't put the entire Nebraska team on as all-Missouri valley eleven instead of only seven.

Don't read this—It's nothing but an "I-told-you-so-story." Bye the bye, just look up our dope story in Saturday's (the 22nd) issue of the Daily Nebraskan and notice that the said dope was correct. Here is the way we doped it out—Iowa has nothing but end runs and her hopes of victory are based on the spread formations. The Cornhuskers are acquainted with these plays. They can break them up. This will leave Iowa helpless for Nebraska can whip her at straight football. That's just what happened. Wherefore we consider ourselves some dopesters. (How that man hates himself.)

Hawley Is Sore.

Hawley, the Iowa coach, was sorer than a mess of bolts Saturday night over Empire Hadden's interference with one of his pet tricks during the Iowa-Nebraska game. The Cornhuskers had carried the ball deep into the Hawkeyes' territory, only to lose it on a fumble. Then the Iowans took the oval and ran off a play or two, when the referee blew his whistle to punish the Cornhuskers five yards for being offside. That was the cue for Gross, the Iowa quarterback, to pull the prize Hawley trick. The Iowa center nonchalantly passed the ball back to Gross, who as unconcernedly sauntered through the Nebraska squad, asserting that the penalty was fifteen yards for holding. The Cornhuskers were tricked and Gross was about clear of the bunch, preparatory to setting sail on a sprint to a touchdown, when Empire Hadden grabbed him and took possession of the ball. That cooked Gross' goose and effectually disposed of the Iowa trick. Coach Hawley beefed all evening and was still at it when the Hawkeyes pulled out of town on a special train late at night. He said he expected officials to make mistakes, but he thought he had a big kick coming
