A FRIEND GONE.

Yesterday morning one of the best friends the students of the University of Nebraska possessed slipped away from her daily tasks to enter the faculty of a greater school under the supervision of Life's Greatest teacher. Her associates will notice her loss not because she was so aggressive with them but because of the conscientious performance of her daily tasks.

Those whom she taught loved Miss Julia Korsmeyer for her effective discipline. She would not allow her students to fall back and do poor work. Rather than fail them as some professors do, she gave them personal help and inspiration and held them to their tasks till they were well on their way toward the top. Hundreds of old Nebraska students attribute their sound instruction in the Romance Languages to her incessant effort.

Her relations with the other members of her department were those of close friendship rather than the formal connections so often noticed. Her death will be a personal loss to her associates, which time can never temper.

The students and faculty of the University of Nebraska wish to express their sincere grief and deep sorrow to Miss Korsmeyer's mother and relatives because of their joint loss and bereavement.

THE BANQUET.

Tonight at the hour of six the 1913 all-victorious football season comes to an end. It has been coming to an end for several weeks, but the absolute necessity of choosing all-overly mythical elevens and the desire of the fans to hold on to the honors of the season while they are fresh have contributed to prolong the hour. In the din of the banquet room, then, the season will be lived over for the last official time, and when the last epicurean leaves the hall the season will be finished.

The Nebraskan extends a personal good will and congratulation to every man of the team, and to the reserves. May the 1914 season be as prosperous.

SIDE LINES CONTRIBUTE TOWARD FUTURE SUCCESS

Professor Grummann Advises That Men Appreciate the Opportunities for Advancement Found on the Campus.

"Side Lines in College Life" was the subject of an address by Prof. P. H. Grummann to a meeting of university men in the Temple last evening. Because of the rain the meeting was not as largely attended as had been expected. However, a fair-sized crowd took advantage of the opportunity to hear Professor Grummann speak.

Introductory to his talk Professor Grummann declared that each and every man is directly responsible for his education. Further, the sole aim of education is to make a man acquainted with the environment into which he is thrown upon graduation; to make him an intelligent citizen in a modern world. Yet no system of education takes the entire responsibility of placing the student in touch with the world. He must assume the responsibility himself and use education to place him in contact with his surroundings. The more thoroughly he becomes acquainted with modern world conditions the better citizen and man he will become.

"Among the more valuable side lines which contribute toward mastery of the world, and success," said Professor Grummann, "is a working knowledge of the administration of the democracy of which one is a unit. On the other hand the influence of music and art in encouraging the choice of the better from the worse cannot be overestimated. In view of this the art association plans to place on free exhibition the best art of the world, and music of the highest character is always heard, at convocation or vespers. In short the influence of music and art is a vital factor in moulding the cultured side of a man's character. One should give at least a part of his spare time toward acquiring a good appreciation of them."

In conclusion Professor Grummann advised that each man learn what one of these side lines were found on the campus.
