Enthusiasm for roller skating reigns supreme at the D. G. house. The D. Gs. do not confine themselves to such a limited space as a roller skating rink, but they spread out over half the sidewalks in South Lincoln.

Uni students may now enjoy the entrancing strains of the moonlight dance on the most cloudy of nights. The Lincoln Hotel management has invented a new artificial moon which bids fair to outshine the real article.

Many well known campus fusers were seen on the rear seats at Easter song services Sunday night. Inasmuch as this is the first offense of its class for many of them, their names will not be exposed until later.

A well known French professor says that since it is so near spring the classroom radiators won't last much longer. We're glad that winter is a long way off.

Rus Philp says that those Nebraskans who are sadly in need of a haircut have an excellent opportunity to beautify themselves now that the janitors are cutting the campus lawns once more.

H. D. claims to have gone to more parties this year than any girl in the freshman class, with the exception, of course, of J. C. Looks as though the Rag would be forced to start a popularity contest in the near future.

About six cabs were drawn up in front of the Xi Psi Phi house Saturday evening. Problem in rapid calculation.

In next year's directory the Delta Chis will be listed as a hospital. Four of the boys are sick. The very latest equipment obtainable will be installed.

Ag News.

Prof. H. R. Smith, head of the Animal Husbandry department of Minnesota Ag School, was a visitor at the State Farm yesterday. Professor Smith was formerly connected with the same department at Nebraska.

Prof. H. B. Philley of the Farm Management department left yesterday for Chicago, where he will attend the Second National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits, April 14, 15 and 16.

Prof. J. H. Flandfen, head of the Dairy department, departed yesterday for Waumksha, Iowa, where he will select and purchase for the State Farm dairy herd. He will also attend the Chicago Conference before returning.

WORLD A MILLION YEARS OLD ACCORDING TO SOME

Authorities Vary, But All Endorse the Statement That Thousands Will Not Express Age of World.

Thursday evening, at the Uni. Y. M. C. A., Professor Barbour spoke on "The Beginning of Things." He introduced his talk by telling of his trip to Wyoming and of the coal beds which he visited in that state. Many coal beds are still burning, according to Professor Barbour. During his trip he also visited the coal beds of Nebraska, some of which exceed one thousand feet in thickness. Also in the hilly portions of the state are found the remains of fossil animals.

This means that time is very long. Professor Barbour expressed his belief in the first chapter of Genesis concerning the beginning of things and the length of days. You are taught that the world is 5,000 years old. If a geologist tells a person that a fossil animal is a million years old he does not believe it. A prominent professor of the University of Leipzig related that he found written in stone a treatise on medicine which he believes was written seven thousand years ago. Landmarks are continually disappearing. Some things which are here one year are gone the next. Many people not acquainted with the facts are skeptical of the things going on around about them. Dana accepted the theory of evolution. He said that the world is a hundred million years old. Other authorities make it even greater—even up to a billion years. The popular opinion at this time for the age of the world by authorities on geology is a thousand million years. Although many people express their disbelief of this, yet geologists believe themselves to be correct because the measuring rods of time are very accurate. So you see, the world is pretty old after all—and perhaps there were a few wise men before your day.
