

OLUS SHIRTS

TURN YOUR SHIRTTAILS INTO DRAWERS

IN OLUS the outside shirt and underdrawers are one garment. This means that the shirt can't work out of the trousers, that there are no shirt tails to bunch in seat, that the drawers "stay put," to say nothing of the comfort and economy of saving a garment. OLUS is coat cut, opens all the way down—closed crotch, closed back. See illustration.

For golf, tennis and field wear, we recommend the special attached collar OLUS with regular or short sleeves. Extra sizes for very tall or stout men. All shirt fabrics, in smart designs, including slits—$1.50 to $10.00.

Ask your dealer for OLUS. Booklet on request.

Gentlemen:—
After having worn the several shirts which possess the feature of shirt tails turned into drawers—I can without hesitancy state that for athletic purposes or everyday wear, I consider the Olus the only practical design.
Yours very truly,

The Forum

In these happy days when everyone is wishing for peace and giving no thought of what might happen to their country in case peace does not prevail, the below editorials taken from the Chicago Tribune of May 4th are pertinent. Yours truly,

— E. N. BOWMAN.

Sane Patriotism.

From President Lowell and from Col. Henry Lee Higginson the students at Harvard, considering what they should do for their country in the Mexican troubles, got the advice to keep their coats on and, if they wished to fit themselves for service when their service might be needed, to join the organized militia or go to the training camps, which are to be open to college men seeking rudimentary knowledge in the science of war.

President Lowell's talk to the students was a fine piece of sane patriotism, invaluable to the young men, and Colonel Higginson's was not less so. There's a stratum of militancy in the self-contained New England stock which does not easily ignite, but which burns steadily and to purpose when it does.

Neither President Lowell nor Colonel Higginson discouraged the ardent young fellows whose first impulse was to hurrah and put themselves at the command of the government. They merely suggested that the need most demonstrated to date was that of fitting themselves for the ordinary and not the extraordinary events of human life, but the boys were not treated to a scholastic homily on the blessings of peace.

"If we were in danger of war with a great power," said President Lowell, "with our small regular army, I should urge every young man who could do so to set about preparing himself for military service. To be thoroughly effective this ought to be done long before hand; and, therefore, I have been deeply interested in the plan for summer camps which will fit college men to serve as junior officers and thereby fill the greatest need we should suffer in war on a large scale. When an army is suddenly expanded the most pressing need is for trained officers."

"If a call comes before you have finished your course (at Harvard) and you go—go in the 'spirit of regular troops; or if at the close of the college year the call has not come, yet the war cloud still hangs dark on the horizon, let every man who can afford it join some camp organization where he can learn the duties of a soldier."

For the sane patriotism of such educators the country is incalculably in debt.

The Sacrifice.

The dead at Vera Cruz will not have died in vain. They are the victims of military unpreparedness. To speak plainly, they have been slain by the various elements that have kept this country from having an army and a navy big enough and good enough to keep it at peace.

The congressmen who skimp military appropriations to buy votes by means of fake road improvements.

The men who support themselves by paid peace-at-any-price lectures.

The fingers of the dead at Vera Cruz are pointing at them.

The nation will value them at their true worthlessness from now on.

Fifteen American dead at Vera Cruz that Congressman Squash might have the contractor's gang vote for him—several times.

One hundred and fifty American hanged, shot, stabbed, or burned all over Mexico that Secretary Squash might draw a lecture fee for lecturing on peace; that Mrs. Tea-and-Toast might entertain Professor Squish!
