"THE CHANCELLOR"

To the Students:

The University begins to mobilize today. We shall assume the offensive Monday. The advance must be triumphantly pushed against the old forces of ignorance, superstition and idleness. We begin the advance in the shadow of what seems to be the greatest calamity of the centuries,—a general European war. From its disastrous results we are measurably free except insofar as the calamity of one portion of the human race works an injury to the whole. We have very great reasons to be thankful that we are so far removed from the scenes of strife; that peace and prosperity abide with us; and that we can learn of the action of the contestants with sincere regret and pity for all and with feelings of distrust and hatred for none.

Coming together under such circumstances should cause American students to be exceedingly serious in view of their great responsibilities. It is reported that the buildings of Oxford and Cambridge are used largely for hospitals. The French, German, Swiss and Dutch universities will hardly be opened. The students are fighting at the front or guarding the neutrality of the borders. The public schools of great nations of Europe, nations which have been the standard bearers of progress, are closed. The schoolmaster is picking lint to be used for the wounds of soldiers. To America therefore falls the burden of advancing the civilization of the world. The wonderful progress of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries must not be stopped. The studies of the liberal arts, the sciences, pure and applied, must proceed. To us, then, comes an opportunity and a duty. Seriousness and appreciation of the needs of the hour and a special emphasis on those things that are worth while in the life and development of the race should be a dominant thought. The response to the appeal of the hour must come from you and the students in sister institutions.

Disappointing Invention.

A man in Buda-Pesth has invented a method whereby bald heads can be made to blossom as the rose. By a system of needles and gold wire he plants new hairs in the scalp so permanently that they can not be removed except by a hydraulic pile-extractor or a Kansas tornado. Every hair is carefully numbered and registered. In case anything happens at any time, the hair can be replaced by sending the number and a short description to the factory supplying the original parts. Another advantage of this new system is that the hair requires no cutting, because, not having taken out naturalization papers, it does not begin to grow up with the country. On account of the expense of putting it in, also, any wife, no matter how much she might lose her temper, would naturally hesitate to undergo the expense of even making an attempt at pulling it out.

In spite of all the obvious advantages of this new invention, however, we must view it with some regret, when we think of the misplaced talent of the inventor. What he ought to have done is to originate a system of putting new equipment on the inside of people's heads rather than on the outside.—Life.
