POISE.

The star of the unconquered will,
He rises in my breast,
Serene, and resolute, and still,
And calm, and self-possessed.
—Longfellow.

Just how did you do it, Chamberlain?

We advise you to go early if you want a seat at Convocation this morning. Something in store.

Flooding one's system with booze after a football victory is a poor way to show school spirit.

Are you aware that the game Saturday will go down in history as one of the most brilliant games ever played west of the Mississippi? "Jumbo" Stiehm and his men have simply got the goods.

CIVIC DUTY.

The greatest grafter is the citizen who, whether rich or poor, educated or illiterate, claims and exercises all the rights and privileges of citizenship in a self-governing community, but will assume none of its obligations. Witness the man who will not register for fear his name may be drawn as a juror; the man who will not vote; the man who will not perform his plain political duty for fear of his business. These men are civic traitors. They betray not only the living, but also the dead and the generations yet unborn. They enjoy the advantages won by generations of sacrifice and struggle. They turn these institutions to their own personal profit and advantage and pass on to the next generation the wasted inheritance. Unmindful of the sacred obligations of the citizens, they are willing to profit by the effort of others, but unwilling to contribute effort of their own. They take, but do not give.

Men to whom cowardice on the field of battle would be detestable may be routed by a sneer in civic affairs. Men to whom desertion from an army would be a crime unspeakable, without perceiving it will abandon their plain duty in the face of critical occasions. And this is inevitable in a transition stage where we pass from an era largely, or in great part, military in its activities, to an era wholly, or largely, industrial in its character. A great element of difficulty in our present situation lies in transferring the old types of military enthusiasm to new conditions. The citizen has the spirit and virtue of the soldier, but he does not see clearly how to apply these qualities or the necessity of applying them to political and social conditions.—Dr. Charles E. Merriam, University of Chicago, in an address to students.
