Nothing is said nowadays that has not been said before—Terence.

Sympathy is a desirable thing. But it is not enough. The sincere sympathy of 100,000,000 Americans is appreciated by the Belgians. But they cannot live on that alone. They are in dire need of clothing and food. Shall not prosperous Nebraska come to the aid of these peasants stricken by a war not of their making? What is that proverb about a friend in need is a friend in deed? Belgium, assuredly, is measuring us by that rule.

RETIREMENT SALARIES.

The teacher pension problem is again coming to the front. Practically all the countries of Europe have the principle of salaried retirement. England has had it since 1848 and Russia since 1819. Germany particularly provides well for the old age of its professors.

The salaries of instructors are proverbially low. It is claimed that the introduction of a salaried retirement system would bring and hold in the teaching profession many able men and women who now enter fields of employment that offer a safer financial future. The best argument in its favor is that it will remove the fear of poverty in old age, and as a result teachers can spend more time in traveling, live better and devote more time and energy to research work.

The stumbling block to the realization of such a system is the matter of funds. It is doubtful if the people would submit to having their tax burdens thus increased. And it is certain that some professors would protest against receiving pensions paid entirely by the state. The better way would be to have the retirement salary drawn from a fund made up in part by money from the commonwealth and in part by contributions from the professors themselves.

The ideal way, however, would be to pay our teachers adequate salaries now and permit them to look after their own financial future.
