OBSERVATORY OPEN
 TWICE EACH MONTH

Second and Fourth Monday Evenings
 —Many Take Advantage of This Opportunity.

Many students are unaware of the fact that every second and fourth Monday of each month Prof. Sweezy, of the astronomy department, has the observatory open for those desiring to see the stars through the large observatory telescope. The observatory on these evenings remains open from 8 to 10 p. m. At exactly 9 p. m. Prof. Sweezy gives a short talk, with lantern slides, upon what is seen on that evening through the telescope. These talks are very interesting to those who hear them.

In the past these opportunities have been appreciated more by the citizens of Lincoln than by the students. Prof. Sweezy estimates that the average attendance has been between two and three hundred, a very large part of which have not been students. The next opportunity for observing the stars and hearing the lecture will be on Monday, November 23, to which lecture Prof. Sweezy very earnestly invites the students.
