The Alpha Omicron Pi sorority gave an informal dance at their house last Saturday night. About twenty couples attended.

Miss Shields of Holdrege is spending the week-end with Loretta Slater. She graduated from Nebraska in 1911 and is a member of Tri Delt.

Miss Ruth Runniger, Alpha Phi, was in Lincoln Tuesday to give a reading before the members of the City Y. W. C. A. She is teaching at Pawnee City this year.

The Forestry department gave a dance Saturday night at Art Hall. An ideal sized crowd was present. The floor was not crowded, but just enough dancers attended the function to insure an enjoyable time for all. Music was furnished by Frolich's orchestra. Professor and Mrs. W. J. Morrill and Professor and Mrs. R. J. Pool were chaperones.

The English Club had a very interesting program Saturday night at the home of Merrill Reed. Professor Gass read a paper entitled "The Lover of the Chair," and Miss Winnifred Seeger read a play in verse, "Woman's Place Is in the Home." Both these papers were duly praised and criticized by the faculty, and after that a social hour was enjoyed. The next meeting of the club will be held Saturday night, December 12.

The Black Masque society entertained the girls of the Senior class Saturday afternoon in the Temple. Games, dancing and a program of fancy dancing by members of the physical training department were enjoyed. Miss Loe Hayes received the prize for writing the largest number of Senior girls' names she knew in five minutes. At the close of the afternoon refreshments, consisting of coffee and pumpkin pie with whipped cream were issued. It is to be hoped that many more of these parties will be held throughout the year that the girls may get better acquainted with each other before they leave college for good.

At The Magnet.

The Magnet offers a feature program for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, such as one seldom has an opportunity to witness. The greatest living detective, Wm. J. Burns, together with Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, creator of "Sherlock Holmes," will be presented together in the great "Five Million Dollar Counterfeiting Plot," an actual case in the history of the Secret Service. In order that every person may have an opportunity to see this magnificent picture, together with two of the world's most famous men, both in detective service and detective fiction, this picture will be shown for three days. While this feature has been shown all over the east for admission prices of 50c and 25c, the Magnet prices will remain the same, 10c and 5c.

fitting climax to the careers of three as doughty warriors as ever fought for old Nebraska.

Although it is no small credit to the greatest team Nebraska ever had to defeat Iowa when she was at her best by a larger score than did either Minnesota or Chicago, the team which defeated Iowa 16-7 was not the same powerful, invincible machine which crushed Kansas 35-0 only a week before. Only once during the game—early in the third quarter—did Nebraska play up to form. Then the gang got going. Nebraska took the ball on downs on her own twenty yard line and marched straight up the field, five, ten, and even twenty yards at a time for a touchdown. Throughout the game grogginess was evidenced in the play of all the men, but at that their work was such that after the game Eckersall declared Nebraska to be one of the greatest football machines he had ever seen in action. Heavy penalties at critical moments also cost Nebraska at least two additional touchdowns.

The work of Doyle and Delamatre, who alternated at fullback for Nebraska, was the most consistent of the Nebraska team. Both gained consistently through the Iowa line. Chamberlain hit off tackle for many yards but was able to stage but one wide end run—that for seventeen yards. Rutherford entered the game with his left side nothing but a mass of tape, and on the third down of the game took out time for what was practically the first time this season. It looked like Iowa was laying for Rutherford and Chamberlain, and they certainly got Rutherford, and got him so that he played the rest of the game upon sheer nerve. At that Nebraska's plunging halfback made many good gains and his work upon the defensive was up to his usual form. Captain Halligan kicked three field goals, all from an angle, with a certainty that was nothing short of marvelous. His tackle around plays were good for many yards, and once the All-American tackle plunged twenty yards. Potter's generalship was superb, while his touchdown in the fourth quarter was made so easily through Iowa's center that it was almost a minute before the Nebraska rooters realized a touchdown had been made. But to Howard must go premier honors of the day. His tackling was fierce and deadly, and his snatching of forward passes from the outstretched hands of the Iowa secondary defense was the most wonderful receiving ever displayed by a Nebraska man. Howard demonstrated conclusively Saturday the quality of football he was able to play when free from injuries. Throughout the season things have been said to discredit the extent of his injuries, but his playing Saturday was a decided rebuke against all who had a tendency to belittle his work this year. It is doubtful if a Nebraska end ever equalled the record Howard made Saturday.

Iowa was primed for the conflict, and played the most brilliant football of her entire season. The piercing of Nebraska's line by the Hawkeye backfield, while attributed partly to the over-vigilance of Nebraska's forwards in guarding Quarterback

Gross, was nevertheless a splendid exhibition of straight football. Iowa's brace in the final quarter was one of the features of the game. Plunges by Garrettson, Donnelly and Parsons, and short runs by Gross, advanced the ball to within thirty yards of Nebraska's goal, from where a long beautiful pass sailed diagonally across the field past the last chalk line, into the waiting arms of Carberry for Iowa's touchdown. Her football was not of the cleanest, and it is remarkable that Iowa escaped with as few penalties as she did.

Statistics of the game give Nebraska the best of the argument all around and show pretty well the rela-
