

J. R. MARTIN, '12.

Employed on Big Project in Missouri
—Will Visit Relatives and Friends in Holdrege.

J. R. Martin, Engineering '12, called on the instructors of that college yesterday. Practically all of the time since graduation Martin has been employed on a five million dollar drainage project in southeastern Missouri. His home is at Holdrege, Nebraska, and there he will visit for a short time before returning to his work.

CORNHUSKER BANQUET

showed his appreciation by attending this banquet instead of taking part in the Missouri Valley Conference meeting which was being held at the Lincoln. He congratulated the management of the banquet and especially the team for building up the University of Nebraska, and also the student body for its loyal support. He emphasized the fact that there were no knockers and a very few pikers among the student body this year.

Warren Howard, a member of this year's champion team, next told how it feels to be a member of this gang. He, like all the speakers, congratulated the students for their ardent support. This is Howard's last year. He has played twenty-four times in a Nebraska uniform, and only once felt the sting of defeat.

Homer K. Burket, president of the Commercial Club, talked about the benefit that the state received through being represented by such a great team.

Between the last speaker and the succeeding one, Dr. Condra's moving picture of the team was shown, and some very comical expressions were noticed on the faces of the men. These pictures are exceptionally clear and deserve special mention.

Dean Ringer, a former football man, now living in South Omaha, said "that we are here to honor the team," but he also said "that this team can never repay their Alma Mater for the good it has done them." He also remarked about the unselfish spirit in the players.

Luke Morris, the next talker, told some mighty good stories, which all seemed to enjoy.

Coach Stiehm's short talk was right to the point. He said that the success of the team is not due to the players or coaches, but instead to the support it received.

Guy Reed, manager of athletics, thanked the students for their financial support, and stated that some big games will be secured in next year's schedule.

Captain Victor Halligan closed the toasts by giving some vivid accounts of some incidents that occurred on football trips of the past three seasons, and closed by thanking each and every one for their loyal support.

Chancellor Avery then got up and asked permission to send former Chancellor Andrews, who is now sick in bed, a telegram to show him our love and affection. This request was unanimously granted.

STATE CONSERVATION CONGRESS HAS FILM

Shows Methods of Dealing With Hog Cholera—Dr. Kigin Has Aided Materially in the Work.

The State Conservation Congress, with the assistance of Dr. Kigin, the state veterinarian, is preparing a film on the treatment of hog cholera. The film will show the methods adopted to prevent the spread of this dread disease, from the vaccination down to the disposal of the hogs that have died from the disease. Several years ago a serum was discovered that would prevent the inoculation of the herd if they were vaccinated before infection. From that time on there has been a rapid advance in the way of preventing the disease and in the treatment of animals infected with it. The object of the congress is to show the farmer what to do in case his hogs are in danger of dying from this dread disease and then, too, the film will show every step in the actual operation and the advice to be obtained from this film can hardly be measured, as it will be one of the only opportunities that the farmers of this state will have to see the methods of combatting the disease that has ruined many farmers in this country and Europe.

The state has made it a law that no one can bury a hog that has died of cholera and the film shows the method of disposing of the dead animals.

The congress is also putting out a film on tuberculosis in cattle. This film shows the different dairy breeds, herds and the methods of taking care of the daily production of milk and the method of inspecting herds. In the same film the various infections found in cattle are shown so the farmer may have the opportunity of knowing the different diseases, as the hoof and mouth disease, by sight. The film is technical and educational, and this is evidenced by the fact that several of the neighboring states have asked that the film might be loaned to them that they may show their farmers the same things that the Nebraska farmers will learn that go to see these two films as they are shown throughout the state.

PROFESSOR FOGG WILL START EXPERIMENT

Packers and Stockraiser to Sell Him the Stock—Chance for Students to Earn.

Professor Fogg's statement the other day that he intends to buy a goat to feed on freshman themes in Rhetoric 13 has resulted in a discussion rivaling that of the "Peerless Leader's famous grape juice proposition. Since the publishing of his statement a few days ago, Professor Fogg has been besieged on all sides for information about his goat-feeding theory. Packers and stockraisers all over the country have offered him goats guaranteed to be in perfect condition, with the traditional castiron goat stomach in working order. If the professor accepts their offers to experiment with the animals, great benefits may result to the students at Nebraska who are working their way through school. Instead of having their themes ignominiously consigned to the trash heap, they might sell them to goat raisers and in that way reap large and lucrative rewards.

The students' side of the question alone makes it worth while for Professor Fogg to perform this experiment, but when we consider the benefits that the faculty would derive, it is most imperative that it should be done. Many of the faculty ride bicycles, as is too well known to require explanation. Therefore, if goats could be successfully fed on freshman themes they could as easily afford such animals to be further aid in their work. One professor was heard to remark that his freshman classes could easily feed enough goats to transport the German army clear to Paris, giving each man an animal for himself.

It is fully believed that the pressure being brought to bear on Professor Fogg will result in his performing the experiment. Should he do this he will earn the gratitude of all professors and students, not only here, but all over the world wherever the vexing problem of the disposition of freshman themes has to be dealt with. It will be the case of another Nebraska man going down into history as a true friend of mankind; one to whom the world shall ever owe the most profound respect and gratitude.

TEXAS MAGAZINE FOR DECEMBER GOOD

Deals With Many Interesting Things, and Especially Those of the South and West.

The December number of "The Magazine," a monthly of the Texas University, has been received. It contains several good articles. The most interesting one is the one entitled "Football in the South," by Coach Allerdice, in which he explains in a very interesting manner why Southern football players are not given recognition in the North and East. Other stories of merit, written by students of the school, are: "Six Hundred Diameters," "Dolly Boy," and "Just Like Her Mother."

IRRIGATION PICTURES SHOWN IN THE STATE

Government Officials Accompany the Picture Machine in Order to Explain.

The state motion picture films were run before the State Irrigation Congress at Bridgeport, Nebraska, Thursday and Friday evenings. The various government officials connected with irrigation were there, as well as the people in this state who are interested in this method of farming. The people of the North Platte valley are great on irrigating and raising sugar beets. They are also great boosters for the Nebraska University.
