A PSYCHOLOGY PROBLEM

It is a good psychology problem to figure out what will be lost to human nature when world peace becomes a reality. What shall take the place of the hanker for the thrills of war? Prof. E. L. Thorndike of Columbia University has written an excellent article on the questions involved. We quote part of it:

"The 'born' warrior, the professional soldier, even the fighting sport and adventurer, and all who would by choice participate in wars, will not suffer when wars have gone the way of trial by fire, blood-feud, and piracy. They need not lose one jot or tittle of the joy of living. As international police, serving the international department of justice and correction, they can be happily engaged in preventing outrages by any nation, in taking concealed weapons away from any dishonorable party, in actually putting hors de combat any twentieth century Napoleon who may wish to try his might against the right of the civilized world. There will be just about enough war-work for such men.

"The onlookers who pay, the mothers, children and friends of those who fight, ask no equivalent emotions for those which war would bring. The excitement, anxiety, terror and endless grief no one, even under the insane obsessions of primitive war-lust, will crave. A son killed in war will be reckoned as a victim to human stupidity, like one hit by a chance shot from a street fight, run over by a careless engineer, or poisoned by ill-inspected meat.

"The only losers by peace are the deadheads—the bums—who neither fight nor suffer. They lose the cheap excitement of contemplating wholesale murder and of playing with the lives of nations. They are jealous of national dignity because they 'like to see a good scrap.' They do not believe in compromise because it is 'tame.' They would like to show Germany or Japan what we could do in a war! A war is good to read about while it lasts and to brag about afterward!

"To substitute a rational patriotism for self-congratulation at the exploits of a military 'team' involves teaching ourselves to take pride in what we have earned and to prize only worthy achievements."
