THE FORUM

A JOLTER

To the Forum:

Do you want in the Cornhusker? We want you in—that is if it is agreeable to you. The fact that we would like to see you in the book will not put you there.

The book must come out on time even if a few people are not in it. You must help us to get the book out promptly. You can do it by getting your picture taken on or before January 18. If not, in this way we will, no matter how much we regret it, be compelled to leave you out. We must keep our promise to the "on time people" by putting the book out May 1st. Let us help you to put out your book on time. If you will hand in articles, snap-shots, jokes and cartoons—this will give us a chance to help you make it representative. Are you alive? Wake up! Show a little ginger! Get busy! See Samuelson.

It gives the inside story of bank guaranty legislation in this state and the connection of such men as W. J. Bryan, C. O. Whedon, P. L. Hall, I. D. Evans, A. C. Shallenberger and H. W. Yates therewith. The pamphlet contains also statistics of banking and bank failures in the state from the beginning, many of them never before gathered. STUCK TO HIS FRIEND

BORROWER INSPIRED BY SPIRIT OF LOYALTY.

Had Altogether Too Much' Self-Respect to Apply to Anyone Else While Old Neighbor Had Things to Lend.

No one could truthfully deny that most of the small farmers of Dilmouth were addicted to borrowing—farming tools chiefly—although as occasion arose they would borrow anything else with the utmost cheerfulness. The burden fell heaviest upon Caleb Peaslee, a thrifty farmer who kept every necessary tool, and who tried to keep them in condition for use. The advent of a new farmer, a well-to-do man who brought with him almost every known appliance for tilling the ground, seemed to open an avenue of escape from some of his troubles.

"Mebbe some of these hawks'll take toll fr'm that man Barney that's taken the ol' Staples place for a spell," he confided to his son. "I hope so—I do, so. My seedtime and harvest has come in between the times when other folks was a-usin' my farmin' tools ever since I can remember, and I've got about tired out. I'm goin' to see if I can't turn some of 'em his way, and get a little rest."

Caleb made his first attempt at "turning them" when Jake Meader, his nearest neighbor and an inveterate borrower, came for the wheel hoe, which lay in the tool shed with one wheel broken. Jake went to the shed and examined the hoe, and then returned to the grindstone, where Caleb and his son were grinding scythes. Jake's face wore a dissatisfied expression.

"Ain't you goin' into Bangor some time this afternoon, Caleb?" he inquired, anxiously.

Mr. Peaslee drew his thumb carefully along the scythe, testing the edge.

"I d'know but mebbe I shall," he returned, noncommittally. "Why?"

"Why!" returned Jake, in aggrieved surprise. "On account of that wheel hoe—that's why. Here it's been laying right there in that shed for four-five days with the wheel broke, and the weeds gettin' higher in my beets every minute. I call'ated to borrow it this afternoon and see if I couldn't get 'em thinned out a little—and here I find that you ain't got it fixed yet!"

Caleb regarded the borrower with a fine irony, tempered by an exasperated amusement.

"See here, Jake," he said at length, "if my tools ain't in shape to suit you, why don't you go up the road a piece and try Barney. He's got everything you need in the way of tools—mebbe you can get jest what you want there, and get it when you want it. I'd reelly ruther you'd try him a spell."

Jake turned to Caleb a face full of wounded dignity.

"Beats all how a man'll live right alongside of another man for years, and not know him, after all," he burst out, earnestly. "I want you to know, Caleb Peaslee, that I ain't none of your to whiffle-minded folks! Them that wants to can borrow of Barney, but I ain't goin' to. I started in borrowin' of you when I fust come here, and I'm goin' to keep on borrowin' of you as long as you've got anything to lend!" —Youth's Companion.

May Be New Ceylon Industry.

The production in Ceylon, on a sufficiently large scale, of acetic acid, if it be successfully accomplished, will be a notable instance of a new industry being born as a result of war. The possibility of turning the "milk" in the coconut into acetic acid is now receiving the attention of the authorities in Colombo, and this probable additional source of supply will be welcomed.

Found Ring in City Dump.

A small boy when delving in one of the city dumps at Bangor, Me., recently found a napkin ring of silver.

The name of M. C. Pierce was engraved upon it. Twenty-five years ago the home of Pierce was entered by burglars, who took about one thousand dollars' worth of valuables, the ring being among them.
