MEMBER OF ROYAL
FAMILY AT NEBRASKA

Occupies Glass Tomb in University Museum—Reporter Digs up Some of Her Back History

As black as Poe's raven and much more impressive than this bird, a member of the royal family of the Pharaohs lies in its glass tomb in the University of Nebraska Museum. For nearly a quarter of a hundred centuries this ancient has knocked about the world since her bodily resurrection from the regal mausoleum in which she first was placed, and it is for no man to say how long it still must wander before it crumbles to the dust it now resembles.

Its age is thought to date from the time of the ruler Rameses the Second. The Bible tells the story of the first part of her life. It was no other than this dried princess who started the motto of "Safety First" and, practicing what she preached, yanked the young boatman Moses from among the daisies, or was it water-lilies. How many dusky, amorous, sonorous toned Fatimas attended her in her life is for the wilder imaginations. (Note: These Fatimas were the fair women of Egypt, not the puerile ambition that comes at fifteen cents the package. Both are equally deadly.) Whether any Antony sued and won her hand is also unknown, for the bandages still cover that part of her body. Her pedal extremities have been uncovered, though, and yes, girls, she has small feet.

JOHN BUNNY

Comes to the Oliver in person with his Big Company in the Musical Comedy, "BUNNY IN FUNNYLAND" Friday Matinee and Night, Feb. 12

Piano Explanation of the Symphonies Illustrating on the piano, Professor Dann explains parts of the symphonies which are given at convocation under the direction of Mrs. Raymond. These illustrated lectures are not in the nature of a class. Attendance is optional. The aim of the lectures is to cultivate in all an appreciation of good music and to enable those interested in the series of symphonies to a better understanding of them. Professor Dann selects certain parts of each symphony, lectures on it briefly, and then illustrates on the piano.

These lectures are given every Saturday in the Art Gallery at 5:00 p. m. They are open to all.

Consideration for Male "Hooker-Up" is Lecturer's Plea

Champaign, Ill. — "Inconsiderate styles" in dress for women, which place a man in peril of losing an eye or bursting a blood vessel, were denounced by Mrs. John C. Hessler, a lecturer, to the school for housekeepers at the University of Illinois.

"The projecting hatpin is a menace to men's eyes," she said, "while every married woman knows the gown that fastens in the back endangers the blood vessels of the male hooker-up."

"The fat woman should resolutely take the question of style into her own hands. Her lines should not go around and around; it's too far around her. Fat women should not wear tight clothes—they should leave something to the imagination. Better a wrinkle from looseness than a plump bulge fully revealed."
