THE EDITORIAL SANCTORIUM

Introductory to the publication of the Daily Nebraskan for this semester, it might be said that the regularly selected editor, Mr. Dick Koupal, will not be able to occupy the royal chair in the editorial room until some time during the forepart of next month. Mr. Koupal's absence is unavoidable and for the present the policy and destinies of this column will be in the hands of the contributing editor. For this reason we hesitate in proclaiming our ideas on editorial policy. We would regret to take a position from which a retreat might be necessary.

Generally, we might say that our ambitions and energies will be expended in what we deem as beneficial to our school and the general welfare of the student body. By setting our guns with this wide range we hope to hit within the proper lines.

A TRADITION WORTH KEEPING

There is an element of success in classification. After the New York corps of street cleaners had been arrayed in uniforms of white, the efficiency of that department was doubled. Men took pride in their work, there was something distinctive in their position, and results were highly commendable.

Reasoning along this same line, we can see success in the universal use of the green cap for Freshmen. While the illustration may seem somewhat out of place, still we can see where the same principle can be applied.

By the use of a common head paraphernalia, Freshmen are placed in a distinctive class. It promotes a bond of friendship among themselves which augurs well for the future accomplishments of the class. Freshmen as a whole are strangers to the entire University. They come for the first time from all parts of the country and some such device is needed to offer an easy access for acquaintances.

The good in the practice and beneficial results therefrom are plain to the upper-classman who has watched closely the process for several years, but in many instances it is difficult to give the suspicious Freshman the proper point of view.

Consistency, thou art a glittering soapstone. With flattering smiles, well polished manners, oiled tongues and greased palms, fraternities encourage the unsuspecting Freshie into the belief that the world is a golden dream and that he, with a majestic scepter, reigns supreme on a royal throne. What is effected in a few short days, it takes a whole year to remedy with the club, the gun and the sword.

These are the days when you want to bask in the sunshine; loiter on the way home; talk to someone who has really nothing to say; laugh when there is nothing to laugh at—for tomorrow will be different. With the commencement of regular classes, life takes on a new aspect and our little unproductive habits must be squelched.

A pert hat cocked at an angle; a striking suit; hair done with the latest precision; searching eyes that hesitate; and in fact, in the words of the rough, "She was all dolled up." Yes, she is a rushee.
