THE INNOCENTS IN POLITICS

The attack on the Innocents in the last number of the Awgwan is manifestly unfair. It contains a hint that the society as a body is attempting to influence certain political struggles about the campus, and then it fails to suggest the evidence on which the writer bases his conclusion.

The deeds of individual members is often mistaken for the activity of the organization. The Innocents probably have never as a body taken part in any purely political fight. If they have, it should be known. Until then, an attack on the organization is out of place.

Some men of the present Innocent society are known for their political activity. There is no disgrace in such a reputation. Furthermore, their being chosen to membership in that organization is no reason why their efforts in that line should cease. Only if the society acts as a body, or the individuals use their membership to add weight to their influence, can they be convicted of unfairness. We trust that the Awgwan will explain its meaning at greater length at the next opportunity.

UNI STUDENTS AND CIVICS

One of the local papers will soon begin running a series of articles written by local men and dealing with public questions. This is done in connection with work in the Lincoln high school. There are very few students in the University who would not profit by reading the same articles.

Cornhusker Management Makes a Dire Threat

The Cornhusker management yesterday threw a scare into the seniors and juniors when they announced the reservation of a right to print any picture they see fit opposite the name of parties who fail to have their pictures taken at Townsend's before the final day. The officials when interviewed refused to give out any definite assertions as to what might be expected, but merely hinted that it might be anything from a kangaroo to a landscape or an advertisement for a favorite breakfast food.

"Other schools have the same difficulty with their junior and senior pictures as we do," said Editor Schwab. "There seems to be a general aversion among university people to appear before the camera man. Several of the larger eastern annuals are using the methods we threaten and have found them very successful. One book had a special staff artist who did nothing but cartoon the delinquents."

All other departments of the Nebraska annual are progressing rapidly and those in charge wish to impress upon the seniors and juniors the importance of getting their pictures ready for the book. To have a successful Cornhusker the management must have the co-operation of all. Now that examinations are over it is expected that the delinquents will appear in rapid succession and that the threat of the Cornhusker management will only have application to a few.

AN IMPRESSION OF KOSMET REHEARSAL

At an instant's notice, young, stalwart men become aged and infirm, blooming young girls become gossiping old women, heart free youths and maidens fall violently in love, fairy stories come true and become fairy stories again, ordinarily sober individuals become fountains of mirth. These transitions are not the result of miracles but of Kosmet practices which are being held at the Temple several times each week.

The girls and men do not sound as they look, but their voices betray their characters. There are typical Englishmen, infirm old men, self-confident young men, care-laden theatrical men, equally care-laden and more expressive theatrical ladies, (very audible those), fairies, society women who would like to be fairies, and French maids. Plans and specifications are being drawn up for disguises, which will make these people resemble their words and voices.

The chairs and tables are mountain scenes, rippling brooks, enchanted grottoes and peaceful hillsides—but they don't seem to know it. Because of this indifference to the demands of realistic art, on February 18, the date of the Kosmet production, the chairs and tables will be shouldered from their positions of honor and will be replaced by real scenery.

Rehearsals are being held several times a week and while social stunting languishes among the membership of the cast, the play is being rapidly whipped into shape.

THE NEBRASKAN CAT HAS GONE

What has become of the little old maltese cat that made her headquarters at The Daily Nebraskan office all last semester? The accusing finger points toward Nebraska hall and the medics.

Nobody knows where she got her living, as eatables of any kind are rather scarce on the campus, even for a cat. Nevertheless she kept sleek and fat and announced her daily arrival at the office by mewing and rubbing against the window. When admitted, she amused herself by caressing the members of the staff. In turn they amused themselves by playing barber and cutting her hair. When last seen she had a ring around her tail and two niches in her back.

For some reason the little gray cat comes no more. She has been watched for every day for the past two weeks, but all in vain. Poor kitty has gone the inevitable road mapped out by the medics for all her race, and the cutting, so innocently begun, has probably been everlastingly finished.
