ONE-ARMED TEXAS BOY IS GOOD BALL PLAYER

University of Texas, Feb. 23.—Dick Hooper, captain of the local team, has only one arm, but is one of the best players on the team.

Dick plays in the outfield, and wears his glove on his right hand. After he catches the ball, he throws it in the air, slaps the glove under the stump of his left arm, catches the ball out of the air and throws it. He goes through the operation with such speed that he can get the ball started for the diamond after making a catch almost as quickly as an outfielder with two hands.

Last season he threw out ten runners at the plate. He had 105 chances in the field and did not make an error. He also is very good at bat. Last season he hit safely in sixteen consecutive games, making a better record than most of his team mates. After he graduates this spring he plans to enter Dartmouth.

IT HAUNTS THE LIBRARY

A fluffy, dimpled coed, goes into the library and sits at the magazine table beside a studious stude.

"Good evening; do you care if I sit next to you? No? Well, that's awfully nice of you. I'll be as quiet as a little mouse. I wouldn't have time to talk if I wanted to, I have so much studying to do.

"Do you know it's awfully hard for me to get down to work this week? I studied so hard for finals that I haven't an idea in my head. Pardon me—oh, I thought you said something.

"I do love to study in the (lib) don't you? It's so inspiring to look at all these books and things, and then the people are so interesting!

"Did you hear what that girl said when she moved over to the other table?"

"Once in a while some one comes in here to work!"

"Isn't she a cat? She looked right at me when she said it. She's jealous, that's all. I don't think she's very pretty, do you?"

"Oh, you do? And intelligent looking and as though she had a sense of the fitness of things? Well, there's no accounting for tastes. I wouldn't like that type myself.

"Do you know Miss Jones? Don't you think she's adorably pretty? You don't? Why! You horrid thing! Somebody said I look just like her. You had noticed the resemblance? Well! ! !

"I guess I'll go to work.

"Oh, say, do you belong to Troop D?" Well, why don't you join? You know, I think even if a man isn't very good looking, he looks well in a uniform. Don't you?"

"Horrors! Did you swear then? I'm so glad you didn't, because I would have thought perhaps you were tired of talking to me, and I'm enjoying myself so much. I think you're awfully interesting, and any way good looking men are so apt to be conceited, don't you think so?"

"Do you come over here every night to read? Never again? Well, aren't you funny—I like it here awfully well! No! is it really as late as that? I'm afraid I'll have to go.

Hope I haven't bothered you. Why, do you know everyone has moved from this table? Isn't that strange!

"Well, good night. Hope I'll see you here again some time. What did you say?"—Silver and Gold (Colo.)

Activities Help

"Proof of the soundness of the statement often made by Chancellor Jordan and President Wilbur that student activities are valuable to the participants is contained in an investigation of the undergraduate life of men who have been characterized by them as being "among the prominent and successful men who have graduated from Stanford." With but few exceptions, those members of the alumni who were named by either the president
