"GIRL WITH THE GREEN EYES" MAKES BIG HIT

the grace with which he wore it were good, and the awful slip in the junior play, when an electric buzzer was pushed and the bell rang about a minute afterward was averted by the simple expedient of having the ringer push the button and reach off the stage to ring the bell at the same time. Once Percy Spencer obviated the formality of pushing the button and just reached out and rang the bell.

And it was fun when the leading lady's hat bumped the leading man's nose, he was so surprised, and when the stage hands rang down the curtain with a thud upon the disappointed wife's hand, and when the odor of gasoline on that newly cleaned and pressed dress suit drifted out over the audience, and when Miss Leyda knocked the bottom out of the tambourine. Altogether "The Girl with the Green Eyes" was one of the most satisfying performances that has been played here.
