Attorney General Reed lost in a suit in Douglas county to recover for the state an estate worth $50,000. He contested the will of James Bates, who left his property to his friend, Hans Anderson. The attorney general alleged the deceased, when the will was made, was not competent. The county court decided that while Bates was not strong mentally, he was sufficiently normal to make a will. An opinion rendered by Deputy Attorney General Dexter Barrett provides that alcoholic ingredients of all preparations made by pharmacists shall be denoted on the bottle in which they are sold. This applies, he says, to all classes of medicine and other preparations.
