OPPORTUNITY FOR SHORT COURSES IN AGRICULTURE

Now is the time for all towns wishing to have an agricultural short course or extension school next winter to make application to the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture at Lincoln. Several applications have already been received, but there are still a few dates open. An agricultural short course is similar to a four days' farmers' institute, except that definite courses are given in but three subjects. A selection of several different courses is offered to the men in farm mechanics, soils, animal husbandry, dairying, insect pests, farm management, vegetable and fruit growing, plant diseases, poultry, rope tying and electrical wiring. The women, also, have lectures and demonstrations on foods and dietetics, and textiles and clothing. The community wishing to have a short course is asked to pay only the local expenses. If sufficient interest is shown in securing such a course at any point, the Extension Service of the College of Agriculture will send a representative to explain the details of such a meeting and arrange for dates. Further information concerning the nature and work of the short course may be had by writing for Extension Bulletin No. 37 of the College of Agriculture, which has just been issued.

Prof. P. M. Buck returned to the University yesterday from Delaware, Ohio, where he attended the funeral of his father-in-law, Dr. F. M. Hall.

Silas M. Bryan, '15, who is attending the Harvard law school, returned to Lincoln last Saturday to spend the summer.
