much of his work under Dr. Howard during the last years of his course.

During the years 1883-1889 he was associated with the Lincoln High School as teacher and assistant principal. In 1889 he was elected principal but accepted instead an adjunct-professorship in Modern Language at the University under Professor Edgren. In 1894 the department of Modern Languages was divided and Fossler became professor of Germanic Languages and head of the department. Since then the department has grown to be one of the strongest language departments among the colleges of the west. In place of an enrollment of about 200 in the whole Modern Language department in 1889, there are now about 700 students a year enrolled in the German department. The faculty of the department consists of two professors, one associate professor, three assistant professors and several fellows and scholars. During the summer the enrollment in the department is about 100.

Besides his two years of study in France Professor Fossler has twice taken advantage of leaves of absence from the University to travel and study in Germany. The first occasion was in 1889 and the second in 1898.

"A Brief German Grammar" 1896, and "Practical German Conversations" 1905, are two of Professor Fossler's best known works. Besides these he has edited various German texts for class use. More recently he has written a biography of Franz Rosegger and translated his "Waldschulmeister" for "German Classics of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centures."

He has also contributed various articles to The Journal of German Philology.

During his long service at the University Professor Fossler has exerted a wholesome influence upon thousands of students who have taken his work. His emphasis upon the noble and beautiful in life, his breadth of view, his freedom from bias in his judgment, and his genuine interest in Nebraska young men and women have made him a vital factor in the development of the University.

WORLD'S RECORD FOR HIGH PRICES MADE

At the Holstein-Freisian consignment sale at Detroit on June 8 and 9, a new world's record for high prices was made. King Champion Rag-Apple, a 7-month-old bull, son of a $25,000 bull and a cow with a record of forty-one pounds of butterfat in seven days, sold for $20,000. One hundred and forty-two head brought an average of $1,096.58. Para Lutsche Vale Cornucopia, owned by William Bishop of Washington, has set a new market for the world's record for milk production. She exceeded the previous champion by 792.2 pounds of milk. This places the record for 365 days at 31,243.4 pounds of milk.

Miss Maude Gaeckler who received her doctor's degree at Yale university, last week, arrived in Lincoln Saturday evening. She was the only woman Sanscrit scholar at Yale and the first to graduate there in that line. Her thesis was written in Sanscrit, something which was never done before successfully. Miss Gaeckler is a graduate of the University of Nebraska with Phi Beta Kappa honors.
