NAMES COMMITTEE ON JOURNALISM STUDY
 the popularity of the newswriting and newsediting courses under Professor Fogg that more than 100 students are enrolled in the newswriting class alone, this semester.
 The popularity of the work, the serious intention of many of the University students to enter journalism, the inadequacy of the courses, has led to a widespread demand for a strengthening of the work. The Nebraska state press association last fall unanimously passed a resolution demanding a journalism college, and many of the editors of the state, including such powerful ones as Harvey Newbranch of the Omaha World-Herald; Victor Rosewater of the Omaha Bee; Norris Huse of the Norfolk News; Ross Hammond of the Fremont Tribune; and Edgar Howard of the Columbus Telegram.
 This activity of the newspaper men, augmented by a definite campaign for more adequate recognition of the work by Sigma Delta Chi and Theta Sigma Phi, the journalism fraternities and sorority on the campus, led to the appointment of the senate committee which reported adversely to the college, but which was followed by the faculty expression in favor of broadening the courses.
