LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS RECITAL

"The concerto is a work of monumental proportions, and of remarkable force and directness in its message. An attentive listener must feel that the composer is a real man who has something worth while to say, and in addition was an able craftsman who knows the technics of his art. It was most worthily and nobly rendered by Mr. Harrison and Mr. Silber. Calling, as it does, for large intellectual and aesthetic powers for its interpretation, as well as for consummate technical skill, its rendition bore ample testimony to the natural endowments and acquired abilities of the two artists, whose brilliant and finished playing charmed all hearers. It is not the least of the opportunities afforded the University residents to hear and enjoy such music so splendidly rendered, for such enjoyment is one of the divinely-appointed means of spiritual culture.

"It is good form, and a custom that might well become common in University audiences, to refrain from applause between the movements of a musical work. A noisy demonstration that interferes with the continuity of the work, is a rather weak and shallow praise, or if done to encourage the performer, it is a mistaken kindness. It is better to listen with quiet self-restraint until the entire work is completed, then signify the general gratitude and appreciation by hearty applause."

TO STUDY MODERN COMMUNITY LIFE

University Men's Class to Consider Its Unchristian Aspects
 "Christianizing Community Life," written by Dr. Harry F. Ward and Richard H. Edwards, will be taken up by the University men's class under the direction of Prof. G. A. Stephens of the department of political economy at St. Paul's Methodist church beginning Sunday. The book deals with the unchristian aspects of modern community life and points the way to lines of community reconstruction.

Stanley Newell, a law student at Iowa, recently took a four-hour law exam propped up on pillows in his bed. He was suffering from a gathering in the ear, and was unable to attend the class. The Daily Iowaian says that this was the first authoritative example of an exam taken between the sheet.—Ex.

PREPARE TEACHERS OF RURAL SCHOOLS

Principal Bradford Tells of Agricultural School Training at National Conference of Educators Here

Principal Harry E. Bradford, of the school of agriculture, University of Nebraska, told educators attending the national conference on rural education, held in Lincoln this week, that the school is making every effort to prepare young men and young women to teach agricultural subjects in the rural schools.
 "More and more the agricultural colleges and schools are making their influence felt in the training of rural school teachers," said Mr. Bradford. He told of the demand in rural communities for instruction in the grade as well as high schools in agricultural subjects.
 Dean E. A. Burnett of the college of agriculture of the University is taking part in the discussions at the conference and will preside at the Friday evening session at the Temple.
 The purpose of the conference is to raise the standard of requirement for rural teaching. Among the general topics considered are: "Preparing the Teaching Staff for Rural Communities"; "Improved School Organization, Administration and Supervision for Rural Communities"; "Rural School Organization as Typified in a Variety of School Plants"; "Teaching Needs and Study Courses the Outgrowth of Rural Community Needs"; "Content of Course of Study in Institutions Preparing Teachers for Rural Schools."
 Among the university faculty men attending the conference are: Prof. P. L. Gaddis, University of Nebraska; Prof. C. D. Steiner, University of Utah; Prof. Harvey L. Eby, University of Wyoming; Prof. B. M. Davis, Miami university; and Prof. C. W. Pugsley, head of agricultural extension, University of Nebraska.
