THE JUNIOR CLASS PLAY

In deciding to give its class play at the Temple theatre, rather than down town, the junior class has shown that it is dominated by true University spirit, rather than by a love of show. For it has started a custom that will be followed in the future by junior classes, of giving their play in the theatre built for that purpose.

The greatest inconvenience will come to the cast, who will have to use dressing rooms that are anything but commodious. They will also lose the fun that comes of putting on a play in a large theatre like the Oliver, with its accompanying glamour. To go ahead in spite of this, for the sake of their class, is high tribute to the members of the cast who are working so faithfully. The class should not fail to show its appreciation.

It will be a splendid thing when University traditions like the class plays, can be thought of, when one recalls his college life, as taking place in a part of the University, and not taking place down town. Cannot the loss of spirit among the alumni be traced in part at least to the fact that when they think of the good times during their college days, they think of them as taking place down town at some hotel or theatre, rather than at the University? What associations are we building up for the campus when we do all our playing some place else, and only work within the gates of the University?

The play can be produced on the Temple stage very attractively. The class is setting a precedent that must be set some time, a precedent that shows it is controlled by the highest motives. The junior class has done a worthwhile thing.

UNIVERSITY NOTICES

Life's see-saw very seldom maintains a perfect balance when one is "up in the air."

Too much noise in the Armory while the basketball is going on.

Old stuff, Robert—blow the whistle.

Beginning with Monday's issue of the "Bugle Call," there will appear from time to time, very learned essays on the fraternities that make Lincoln their winter quarters. A systematic and conscientious study of the habits and tricks of the little creatures has been made, in the hope of giving to posterity an accurate account of this history-making group of brotherly lodges.

Hit us with a brick—we're mortified. Midsemesters come along. Three more days and we'll be gone; Seven tests and ten more papers. Say, hand us another nail for our coffin.

This is short but wery, wery sweet.

J. H. Avery to Speak.—J. H. Avery, advertising manager of the Hardy Furniture company, will talk to the 11 o'clock class in advertising under D. F. Cole in Law 101, today. Those who are interested in advertising are invited.

THE DAYS GONE BY

Seven Years Ago Today

The fraternities of Nebraska adopted the honor system to check cribbing in examinations.

The Y. W. C. A. started a contest for the purpose of raising 700 members for the organization.

Five Years Ago Today

Prospects for a varsity baseball team became brighter when the eligibility committee decided that summer baseball would be allowed.

The elimination process in the high school basketball tournament was fast nearing completion, with Beatrice, University Place, Omaha and South Omaha left in the race.

Four Years Ago Today

Before a record crowd filling the three floors of the Oliver, University night again showed itself a bigger drawing card than ever.

The Cornhusker quintet took from the Jayhawker five the first of the series of games for the championship of the Missouri valley.

Two Years Ago Today

Elmwood high school and the Nebraska Military academy; and Lincoln and Wilber opened what was termed the biggest tournament in the history of basketball.

Lillian Helms Polley and the University chorus gave the choruses from "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser" at Convocation.

One Year Ago Today

The first round of games in the state high school basketball tournament was completed with Crete, Plattsmouth, Lincoln, South Omaha and Hastings winning in Class A, Division 1; Omaha, University Place, Newman Grove, West Point and Beatrice winning in Class A, Division 2; Bethany, Falls City, Pierce, Stanton, Harvard, Arlington, Fullerton, and Randolph winning in Class B, Division 1.

To Speak to Commercial Club.—George F. Schwake, of Grainger Bros., wholesale grocers, will speak on "The Wholesale Fruit Business," at the regular meeting of the Commercial club, Thursday evening, March 8, in U 102.
