GIRLS LEARN TO FURNISH HOUSE

Home Economic Students Planning Inside Equipment of Model Residence Built Last Year

The girls of the department of home economics are now planning the furnishing of the house which they designed last year in Prof. Alva A. Baer's class in architecture. The expense is limited to five hundred dollars. Each girl keeps a large notebook with two pages devoted to the equipment of each room.

A special feature of this work is training in measurement. The picture of the room and the furniture must be accompanied by the floor plan and a great deal of attention is given to proper proportion. In one case it was found that the table which had been selected for the library quite filled the room and the chair had to be put in the fireplace. The girls are visiting different stores to learn the various wood finishing. The problem of linen is rather a complicated one now and promises to be worse next year.

SHOULD NOT BE WAGE EARNERS ONLY

Prof. Minnie T. England Says There are Many Profitable Sidelines for Women

"There is no reason why women cannot be successful in business as well as men," said Prof. Minnie T. England, assistant professor of economics and commerce, and took from a drawer of her desk a slip of paper which proved what she said. It showed that she cleared $68.04 from the supervisory farming of six lots last year in University Place.

"The first year I tried supervisory farming," Mrs. England continued, "I rented two lots and planted potatoes and a few pumpkins. I kept a careful account of the cost of raising them and I found that I came out just even."

Makes Nice Profit
But last year Professor England was more successful. She paid $26.35 for labor, $15 for seeds, $7 for rent; a total of $47.35. She received $5.75 for the cantaloupes that were raised, $2.80 for the pumpkins, and $106.89 for potatoes, a total of $115.33.

"Women should not be content with wage earners only," Professor England said. "There are numerous ways of securing larger incomes if one will only put forth the effort. This year I have rented twelve lots," she concluded.

Besides teaching economics and raising potatoes Mrs. England builds houses and sells them.

The chances for the girls to make points toward obtaining the sweater and letter which are to be awarded are very good this year. In each class there will be two teams, composed of nine members and three substitutes, and points will be given for membership on both.

It is easy to learn. Its price includes an Instruction Book.
