WAR PREVENTS ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF ENGINEERS' NIGHT

The one big event of the annual Engineers' week must be abandoned this year, as engineers' night, during which all engineering laboratories are thrown open to the public, cannot be carried out as usual, because of the unsettled conditions arising from the recent declaration of war. The Mechanical Engineering building, which is the center of interest that night, has been turned over to the government and no one is allowed in the building after 6 p. m.

NEBRASKA PLEDGES LOYALTY TO NATION

and several hundred stood up in the rear of the balcony and first floor. Mention of the flag, of the Civil War veterans, of the student volunteers of '98, brought cheers from the crowd, which three times rose to pledge itself to help in one way or another to win the war. Captain S. M. Parker, commandant of cadets, was given an ovation when he appeared on the platform.

Adopt Resolutions

Closing the program, Albert Bryson, '17, read a resolution pledging the resources of the University and the services of every man and woman in the assembly to the cause of the war. The four thousand arose and unanimously endorsed it.

Prof. Grover Barber was the first to address the assembly. He spoke from the point of view of the Civil War veteran, and at mention of their service for a united country, the crowd broke into cheers.

Prof. Sarka Hrbkova of the department of Slavonic languages brought cheer after cheer from the crowd as she praised the principles for the preservation of which America is fighting today. She said that an American depends not upon lineage but upon state of mind. Wherever one finds hearts which cherish the ideals of liberty and democracy, they, if not by birth right, then by sympathy, are Americans.

Governor Neville spoke briefly on the duty of every student to get behind President Wilson and help carry out the program which he has planned. The governor said that the declaration of war should sound the death knell of quibbling and halting; that there was but one thing to do, to give our best to help win the war.

Student Speakers

Edith Yungblut, Theodore Metcalfe, and Robert Waring spoke for the students. Miss Yungblut told of what University girls had already done, and advised strict economy on the part of both men and women as something that every one could do.

Metcalfe said that "there never has been a yellow streak in Nebraska, and there never will be." He recounted the ready response Nebraska has made to call for war services since territorial days of 1861, and said that the present war will not find a different situation.

Waring, who before the declaration of war, was identified with the anti-compulsory military drill league, spoke for the pacifists of the University, declaring that there was not in his knowledge a single student who was not wholeheartedly behind the president in the war. He said that he believed the cause of universal peace would be more quickly brought about by crushing Prussian autocracy than by any other means.

Dean Burnett spoke of the urgent necessity for food conservation, and asked for a volunteer farmer army to work this summer.

Captain Parker, commandant of cadets, told University students of the opportunity for better service to the country through the officers' reserve corps. He spoke appreciatively of his work here during the last three years. Captain Parker expects to be called within a week or so to go to a training camp.

Reading the excerpts from President Wilson's address to congress asking for the declaration of the existence of a state of war with Germany by Regent Miller and speeches by Dean Davis and Professor Fling on "The Meaning of the War," concluded the program. Professor Fling went into a brief survey of the historical events leading up to the present entrance of America into the struggle.

The parade from the campus to the Auditorium was headed by Civil War veterans. The regents, faculty, alumni, cadet band, cadet regiment, girls, and men by classes followed. Everyone wore or carried a flag and senior girls were dressed in dark suits and wore their motorboards. Each division of the parade carried a large flag. Marching in column of fours, the procession was so long that the last division had scarcely turned up O Street when the leaders stopped at the Auditorium.

Halting in their original positions facing north and south, the veterans stood at open ranks while the rest of the procession passed through. Cadets were marched by companies to the north side of the Auditorium, and there, in battalion formation, they were given the order to stack arms, after which they marched into a special section reserved for them.

Prof. L. F. Seaton of the agricultural engineering department is not standing around on one foot talking about what should be done as a preparation for war. The aforesaid instructor believes that actions speak louder than words and is busy instructing the members of the Women's Auxiliary league in the art of automobile manipulation and repair. The course at present consists of five lectures a week and it will continue for three weeks making the equal of one lecture a week throughout the entire semester. Through the courtesy of the local agents the department has been able to secure the display models of both the Stearns-Knight and the Buick for this class.
